Rebounding Marine Mammal Species and Conservation Recovery Challenges Andrea Bogomolni, Kristina Cammen, Jennifer Jackman, 2025-03-19

Marine mammals have been valued for millennia for their cultural significance and more often their exploitative resource value. Many large whale species remain imperilled or are only recently returning from the brink of extinction. In contrast, recent conservation measures have allowed for the successful rebound and recovery of many cetaceans and pinniped species, some to the point of perceived overabundance, whether referring to 1200 Hawaiian monk seals or 7 million harp seals. In addition to their continued intrinsic value alive and thriving today, we also appreciate the value of marine mammal species to ecosystem health. Yet as we grapple with a lack of historical baselines and uncertain ecological and social carrying capacities, several conflicts are emerging at the growing interface between humans and marine mammals. These conflicts include ship strikes, depredation, bycatch, impacts of ecotourism, competition for resources, changing cultural values, and political challenges to marine mammal conservation. Despite the emergence of theory and application of human dimensions of wildlife in the terrestrial realm, the rebound of marine mammals and how we address these conflicts in the coastal and ocean environment are often overlooked when discussing human wildlife conflict issues and solutions. This Research Topic aims to increase awareness of these issues to advance the discussion on how we can address these challenges in ocean systems. Conflicts with rebounding populations of marine mammals have emerged across diverse ecological, sociological, economic, and political contexts. Conflicts often arise from assessing how marine mammals fit into the human world based on the baseline understanding of one's own personal experiences or specific community contexts rather than broader and complex ecosystems understanding or historical context. How do we address these emerging complex socio-ecological problems related to marine mammals? Who defines the problems and how are the problems defined? How do we consider often opposing values and interests in the development of solutions and how do we engage diverse stakeholders in decision-making processes that shape how we will manage and coexist with marine mammal populations for generations to come? How can different disciplines help build the knowledge foundation and strategies necessary to address these challenges?

Mayo Clinic Neurology Board Review: Basic Sciences and Psychiatry for Initial Certification Kelly D Fleming, Lyell K Jones, 2015-06-04
