Abstract: The use of computer software technology has increased dramatically with the advancement of computer technology in recent years. Rapid advancements in software have also benefited people from all walks of life. The management of schools and pupils has been substantially improved by the introduction of software solutions. This essay primarily examines and condenses the importance, key features, and drawbacks of the student information management system.

Keywords: Management Information System (MIS), Personal Computer (PC), Visual Studio, Students Records, Easily Accessible.

I. INTRODUCTION

The early management information system (MIS) for organizations, industries, institutions, and schools was first established in 1978 by a researcher named Raymond Bily when he was a student at Asheville High School. It was then first established by a researcher named Philip Neal, a teacher at Lea Manor High School, from 1982 to 1983. Bedfordshire County Council (Lea Manor's local education authority) then further developed this product, which began being used by other schools in 1984. In 1988, a commercial company, SIMS Ltd., was founded to further develop SIMS. SIMS Ltd. was acquired by Capita Group in 1994. In December 2020, Capita decided to sell their Education Software Solutions business (whose flagship product is SIMS) to private equity house Montagu to reduce debts. Montagu has stated that they intend to continue developing SIMS with a plan to release the latest version, SIMS 8, after the acquisition process has been completed [1]. With the hasty improvement of the higher educational system, the enrollment scales of major universities and colleges continue to magnify. The quantity of students at school has improved, and numerous new disciplines and majors have been opened in the schools or institutions. The types, batches, and majors of the college's students are miscellaneous. These make the individual data management of students very byzantine. Counting the students' data needs a lot of time and energy in daily teaching work. Faced with this enormous quantity of data, to work efficiently, we have to create a student personal information management system to manage this data. The information management system is primarily to manage the important data of students in institutions, schools, and colleges. Student data is an essential indicator of student development. As a significant folder of student data, the utilization and management of student data are very imperative. The old-fashioned management style is mostly bifurcated by the academic management departments of the different majors of the institutions, schools, or colleges to physically maintain and enter student data. Due to the shortage of a fused data broad management podium, coupled with a high-intensity information processing workload and regionalized management of data, the speed of data collation is slow, information loss is prone to occur, statistical errors and query work are inopportune, and management personnel spend a lot of money. Time and energy have had a certain influence on other work in terms of data management. Thus, an integrated management system for the individual data of all institutions, colleges, and schools is required for the management of college and university information. The establishment of the system can merely realize data sharing, facilitate inquiry and management, speed up the import of related data, streamline manpower, free management staff from monotonous information processing tasks, and strengthen the relationship between different professions and departments. There is information exchange between the college and students, parents' understanding of the students' situation at school, and data analysis of the students. Figure 1 below shows the student's information management system.
