

Psych 355 Chapter 6 - Practical aspects of memory.

metacognition = your knowledge about your cognitive processes, as well as your control of these cognitive processes.

-Memory strategies 1: Memory strategies informed by memory conceptswhen using a memory strategy, you perform mental activities that can help improve you encoding and retrieval. Most help you remember something that you learned in the past i.e. lecture information.

-Divided Attention-

people are not as great at multitasking as they think and perform better when focusing all their mental efforts on one task at a time. Important when listening to lectures or reading you text. Distractions reduce the amount of information to which your able to attend.

-Working memory-

has limits. Phonological loop or visuospatial sketchpad may become overly taxed as a result of too much input arriving via the auditory or visual input modalities. Result is less info will make it to long-term memory. i.e. Can study slides before class or read text to familiarize yourself, making it less likely to be overwhelmed during lecture. Evidence on this shows mixed results. Slides being available make no diff on exams in some, and do make a diff for exams in others.

-Levels of processing-

we will recall info better if we process it at a deep level, rather than a shallow one.

-Elaboration-

If you want to emphasize elaboration, you will concentrate on the specific meaning of a particular concept; you'll also try to relate this concept to your prior knowledge and to interconnected concepts that you have already mastered. You should emphasize rich, elaborate encoding, for instance, by explaining a concept to yourself. If you use simple rehearsal = repeating the information you want to learn, you are not likely to benefit much in terms of accurate recall at some later point in time.

try to create why questions when trying to master complex material. Must use deep processing to think about the meaning of material and connect this new material w/ info you already know.

i.e. students in a psych personality course were able to learn more about the theories when they applied them to ppl they know and political figures (did this in a journal).

-Distinctiveness-

Dixon, Lars B., ckman, Lars Backman, 2013-06-17 The concept of compensation in psychology refers to processes through which a gap or mismatch between current accessible skills and environmental demands is reduced or closed These gaps can be principally the result of losses such as those associated with aging or interpersonal role changes injuries such as those that may occur to the neurological or sensory systems organic or functional diseases such as the dementias or schizophrenia and congenital deficits such as those apparent in autism or some learning disabilities Whether the demand skill gaps can be bridged completely reduced only moderately or are impossible to close depends on a variety of factors In every case however the guiding notions of compensation are that some such deficits may be amendable the continuation of the effects of the gap may be avoidable and some functioning may be recoverable In this sense compensation is related to adaptation it is about overcoming deficits managing the effects of losses and promoting improvement in psychological functioning Compensation is a concept that has a long and rich history in numerous domains of psychological research and practice To date however few of the relevant research domains have benefitted explicitly or optimally from considering alternative perspectives on the concept of compensation Although researchers and practitioners in several areas of psychology have actively pursued programs with compensation as a central concept communication across disciplinary divides has been lacking Comparing and contrasting the uses and implications of the concept across neighboring and even not so adjacent areas of psychology can promote advances in both theoretical and practical pursuits The goal of this book is to carry inchoate integrative efforts to a new level of clarity To this end the editors have recruited major authors from selected principal areas of research and practice in psychological compensation The authors review the current state of compensation scholarship in their domains of specialization State of the art reviews of this rapidly expanding area of scholarship are therefore collected under one cover for the first time In this way a wide variety of readers who might otherwise rarely cross professional paths with one another can quickly learn about alternative preferences agendas and methods as well as novel research results interpretations and practical applications Designed to contain broad deep and current perspectives on compensation this volume continues the processes of explicating the concept of compensation linking and distinguishing compensation from neighboring concepts describing the variety of compensatory mechanisms operating in a wide range of phenomena and illustrating how compensatory mechanisms can be harnessed or trained to manage losses or deficits and to promote gains or at least maintenance of functioning Studies in Analytical Psychology Gerhard Adler, 2013-07-04 This is Volume I of twelve in the Analytical Psychology Series Originally published in 1948 these Studies in

The Concept of Moral Progress Frauke Albersmeier, 2022-12-19 What is moral progress Are we striving for moral progress when we seek to make the world a better place What connects the different ways in which moral agents their actions and the world can become morally better This book proposes an explication of the abstract concept of moral progress and explores its relation to our moral lives Integrating the perspectives of rival normative theories it draws a clear distinction between ethical and moral progress and makes the case that moral progress can neither happen merely in theory nor come about by a fluke Still the ideal of moral progress as a deliberate improvement in practices with a positive impact on the world is but one of several types of moral progress relating in different ways to the theoretical and practical capacities of moral agents No elevated level of sophistication in these capacities is required for moral progress to be possible and the abstract idea of moral progress need not be on moral agents minds in the pursuit of the morally better However a desire for impactful moral progress far from being a moral fetish marks a particularly valuable moral outlook
