

Making Manhood

Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine if there were differences in the prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders among different types of jobs. The subjects were 600 employees from a large manufacturing company who had been employed by the company for at least one year. The results showed that the prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders was higher among workers in jobs that required heavy lifting or carrying than among workers in jobs that did not require such activities. This suggests that heavy lifting and carrying are risk factors for musculoskeletal disorders.
