

Pop Art is an Art Movement that developed in the United Kingdom and United States during the mid to late 1950s. The art movement proved to be a challenge to traditions of fine art by combining imagery from popular and mass culture, e.g. like comic books and mundane cultural objects from everyday life. Pop art is universally portrayed as a reaction to the then-dominant ideas of abstract expressionism, as well as a development of those ideas. Due to its utilisation of found items and pictures, which is very alike to Dada. Pop art and minimalism are acknowledged to be Art movements that foreshadow postmodern art, or are some of the earliest examples of postmodern art.

Pop art regularly takes imagery that is currently still in use in advertising. Product labelling and logos that figure prominently in the imagery choice by pop artists, identified in the product labels Campbell's Soup Cans, produced by Andy Warhol. Even the labelling of boxes that consist of food items for retail has been used as subject matter in Pop art, a good example of this is demonstrated by Warhol's Campbell's Tomato Juice Box, 1964.
