

SECULAR LIVES, SACRED HEARTS

Secular Lives, Sacred Hearts contends that the traditional sociological view of secular Britain is misleading. The Church would understand its contemporary ministry and mission better, Alan Billings suggests, if it thought of the nation as 'culturally Christian'.

He encourages clergy and laity alike to take seriously those occasions when ministry is sought – such as baptisms, weddings and funerals – and to ponder what it is that 'cultural Christians' are looking for. Offering some clues based on small-scale research done in his own community, he argues for a recovery of the idea of the parish church as a sacred building, a focus of meaning and service for all within its boundaries.

Praise for the author's previous book, Dying and Grieving: A Guide to Pastoral Ministry:

'The important achievement of this book is to establish this cultural context [the changes in British society over the past 50 years] as the necessary ground for the good pastoral guidance it then offers.'

Church Times

'... a welcome addition to the field of pastoral care in the context of death, dying and funerals... I thoroughly recommend it.'

Lost Church Alan Billings,2013-01-17 In trying to understand the relationship of the British people to religion specifically Christianity we tend to say that people believe or do not attend or do not The argument of Lost Church is that the majority of people do not really fit either of these categories Rather they belong in the sense that they feel some affinity to Christianity and the Church they are not hostile to its ministers they do not find churches alien places to be and they turn to the Church and its clergy on specific occasions But they do not want to attend regularly and their beliefs may be incoherent or even nonexistent and often flicker on and off like a badly wired lamp This absorbing and encouraging volume is a call to lay Christians and clergy to take stock of what is happening and to recover an understanding of the Church that will not alienate those who belong but rather enable ministry to them to continue
