Abstract

This paper aims at tracing the interface of language and ideology mainly from two angles: philosophy and linguistics covering the period between 1846 and 1989. It deals with reviewing how the term 'ideology' has been dealt with as a concept, negative or positive, in philosophy from a Marxist and post-marxist points of view. It also reviews how the term has been linked to language in philosophical discussions, and how linguists have analysed the (re)construction and transmission of ideas, via language, in relation to the formulation of power relations. The basic arguments that lay behind this paper are that language and ideology are inseparable (Fowler & Kress, 1979) and that any discussion of ideology inevitably invites the discussion of language and its manifestations.

Ideology

Ideology: Philosophical Roots Linked to Language

An etymological trace of the word 'ideology' has demonstrated that it is derived from the French word idéologie, a combination of idéo- (Greek, idea), and -logie (Greek, logia). It was firstly coined by Destutt de Tracy in 1801 in his Traite de l'ideologie, to refer to what he calls a 'science of ideas' (Seliger, 1977; Hawkes, 2003). It is also argued that it originated as a "meta-science", a science of science" in the sense that it has the ability to give information about the origins of other sciences and "to give a scientific genealogy of thought" (Hawkes, 2003, p. 60). Tracy proposes that "nothing exists for us except by the ideas we have of it, because our ideas are our whole being, our existence itself" (cited in Hawkes, 2003, p. 60).

At almost the same time when Tracy introduced the notion, de Bonald used the term, though not as positive as Tracy's, to refer to "a sterile study, the working of thought upon itself, incapable of being creative" (cited in Seliger, 1977, p. 14). Such a reference gives a negative feel to the term and this negativity continues hereafter. Indeed, since its flourishing days in the eighteenth century, ideology has also been associated with Napoleon and his lead to the misfortunes of France which emphasizes its negativity (Thompson, 1984). Napoleon deprecated ideologues of their right; of not to adhere to his policies (Seliger, 1977) and criticized them for divorcing themselves of the practical reality and becoming psychotic, which eventually and gradually led to shifting the meaning of ideology from "denoting a sceptical [sic] scientific materialism to signifying a sphere of abstract, disconnected ideas" – an argument later embraced by Marx and Engels (Eagleton, 1991, p. 70).

Marx & Engels' False Consciousness

The negativity overwhelming the term earlier during the times of the French Revolution continued until Marx and Engels presented the basic tenets of Marxism in Die deutsche Ideologie (The Philosophy for Linguists Siobhan Chapman, 2002-11-01. Philosophy for Linguists provides students with a clear, concise introduction to the main topics in the philosophy of language. Focusing on what students of linguistics need to know and how philosophy relates to modern linguistics, the book is structured around key branches of the field: semantics, pragmatics, and language acquisition. Assuming no prior knowledge of philosophy, Siobhan Chapman traces the history and development of ideas in the philosophy of language and outlines the contributions of specific philosophers. The book is highly accessible and student-oriented and includes a general introduction and introductions to each chapter, numerous examples and quotations, comprehensive suggestions for further reading, and an extensive glossary of linguistic terms.
