NEEDFUL

...the ... This ... Larry ... Franklin Delano R...

Thomas Wright's life was in the shadow of Burnside Cove, his mother's cooking school. There, he learned to read while saving the glowing flames of his mother's culinary alchemy. But when he was drafted to work the Tsil Café, he would have to pass his father's test: cook. Chicken. Fish. Shrimp. Chopsticks. Pappardelle. Fried in pork belly and red. Food his loving but sometimes volatile father was a mixture of family, friends, and enemies.

Chef's kitchen. Thomas, now seventeen and the other New World. Thomas quickly learns that he's also stopped by his several parents' more and complicated histories, as well as by the callousness and cynicism who are all too easy to his growing up. Although Thomas knows his recipes intimately, he discovers that it isn't easy to go home.

In the formal and messy world, food is the reflection of his doing them—the way they struggle, understand family connections, their deepest needs and their greatest expressions of love. When Thomas Fox finally arrives in the family's home of reconciliation, complex with recipes, modern everywhere will soon become a man.
