Differentiation and Neoplasia R. G. McKinnell, M. A. Diberardino, M. Blumenfeld, R. D. Bergad, 2013-03-09 There is no commonly accepted mechanism to explain differentiation of either normal or neoplastic cells Despite this fact the organizers of the 3 rd International Conference on Differentiation recognized that there is much emerging evidence which supports the view that both normal cells and many cancer cells share common differentiative processes Accordingly the organizers perceived that clinical scientists and developmental biologists would greatly benefit by together considering differentiation In that way developmental biologists would be apprised of recent insights in cancer cell biology and the physician scientist would be updated on events in developmental biology and both would gain new understanding of the cell biology of neoplasia A specific example may reveal the potential value of developmental biologists interacting with cancer physicians An example chosen at random suggests that probably any paper included in the symposium volume would serve the purpose Dr Stephen Subtelny reviewed recent studies by his laboratory concerning germ cell migration and replication in frog embryos How might those results interest the cancer scientist Dr Subtelny showed that primordial germ cells of a fertile graft will reverse their migratory direction and move into a sterile host Perhaps in this context it would not be inappropriate to state that the germ cells of the graft metastasized into the host

Germ cells from grafts of a different species will populate the previously sterile host gonad
