carefully works through how actors communicated emotions through their voices faces and gestures how audiences appraised these performances and mobilised and regulated their own emotional responses Crucially this book reveals how theatre spaces mediated the emotional practices of audiences and actors alike It examines how their public and frequently political interactions were enabled by these spaces

The fifteenth century one of the most curious and confused periods in recorded history witnessed amazing developments in the printing industry and in the production of books The present volume surveys the history of the manufacture of books throughout the fifteenth century whether written by hand or produced by the press and points out that both methods faced very similar problems and found almost identical solutions for them Actually the fifteenth century itself saw no material difference between manuscripts and incunabula fifteenth century printings and regarded the latter simply as codices produced by a new method of artificial writing Curt F Bühler discusses the impact of the epoch making invention on the scribes as well as the attitudes that the contemporary book lovers adopted toward the products of the press The author also studies the types of men who were attracted to the new industry and the nature of the books that they believed to be readily vendible In addition certain familiar beliefs regarding the history of the early presses are challenged and possible solutions are presented for the problems are still imperfectly understood To illustrate the text beautiful reproductions of illuminated manuscript pages printed pages colophons woodcut illustration and early typefaces have been included The author's discussion of the decoration in books is not so much a study in the fine arts but rather an analysis of the types of volumes which lent themselves to decoration and the various forms of such work      Inland Printer, American Lithographer ,1905
