Nuclear Dialogues American University Studies Series V Philosophy Vol 35:

Nuclear Dialogues David Weinberger, 1987 Set in the hallways of an imaginary conference on philosophy and nuclear war Nuclear Dialogues presents conversations on a wide range of arms race issues in a variety of philosophical styles and from a variety of standpoints Among the questions Do philosophers have anything unique to contribute What does it mean to be against nuclear weapons How sexist are attitudes towards peace activism Does the policy of deterrence involve making threats and when is it morally O K to make threats Is the policy a form of hostage taking Does the same morality bind nations and individuals Is it literally insane to plan a nuclear war Is it wrong to let emotions influence moral judgments Can lives be the subject of calculation How important is the nuclear issue What is peace and what are ways of working towards it Nuclear Dialogues is accessible to those with no philosophic training and is a useful text for courses on the arms race and international relations The Dangerous Ideas of Science Morris Goran, 1989 The Dangerous Ideas of Science describes the religious governmental industrial and general societal opposition to some major concepts of science Included are two cases where religion and science clashed two instances of governments tangling with science one where industry fought science and one of the intelligent general public being opposed The last case is presented as the greatest threat of science Books in Series, 1876-1949 R.R. Following the Leader Raymond C. Kuo, 2021-08-03 Nations have powerful reasons to get their military alliances right When security pacts go well they underpin regional and global order when they fail they spread wars across continents as states are dragged into conflict We would therefore expect states to carefully tailor their military partnerships to specific conditions This expectation Raymond C Kuo argues is wrong Following the Leader argues that most countries ignore their individual security interests in military pacts instead converging on a single dominant alliance strategy The book introduces a new social theory of strategic diffusion and emulation using case studies and advanced statistical analysis of alliances from 1815 to 2003 In the wake of each major war that shatters the international system a new hegemon creates a core military partnership to target its greatest enemy Secondary and peripheral countries rush to emulate this alliance illustrating their credibility and prestige by mimicking the dominant form Be it the NATO model that seems so commonsense today or the realpolitik that reigned in Europe of the late nineteenth century a lone alliance strategy has defined broad swaths of diplomatic history It is not states own security interests driving this phenomenon Kuo shows but their jockeying for status in a world periodically remade by great powers Contemporary Rhetorical Theory John Louis Lucaites, Celeste Michelle Condit, Sally Caudill, 1999-01-01 This indispensable text brings together important essays on the themes issues and
