Nuclear Nonproliferation Us Efforts:

Nuclear nonproliferation U.S. efforts to help other countries combat nuclear smuggling need strengthened coordination and planning ,2002 NUCLEAR NONPROLIFERATION: U.S. Efforts to Combat Nuclear Smuggling ,2002 I will address 1 the different U S federal programs tasked with combating the international threat of illicit trafficking in nuclear materials and the amount of U S funding spent on this effort 2 how well the U S assistance is coordinated among federal agencies 3 the effectiveness of the international assistance equipment and training provided by the United States and 4 information about efforts to combat nuclear smuggling at U S borders My statement today is based on the results of our May 16 2002 report on this subject¹ and information we obtained from the U S Customs Service in May and June 2002 In summary U S efforts to help other countries combat nuclear smuggling are divided among six federal agencies the Departments of Energy DOE State and Defense DOD the U S Customs Service the Federal Bureau of Investigation FBI and the U S Coast Guard From fiscal year 1992 through fiscal year 2001 the six agencies spent about 86 million to help about 30 countries mostly in the former Soviet Union and Central and Eastern Europe combat the threat of smuggling nuclear and other materials that could be used in weapons of mass destruction The six agencies have provided a variety of assistance including installing radiation detection equipment helping countries improve their ability to control the export of goods and technologies that could be used to develop nuclear weapons and providing other equipment and training to generally improve countries ability to prevent nuclear smuggling In particular DOE has installed radiation detection monitors at eight border crossings and plans to install similar equipment at close to 60 sites in Russia through its Second Line of Defense program The State Department has provided radiation detection monitors mobile vans equipped with radiation detectors hand held detectors and other assistance to about 30 countries DOD has also provided equipment and other assistance to about 20 countries 7 Nuclear nonproliferation Gary Jones,2002 According to the International Atomic Energy Agency IAEA there have been 181 confirmed cases of illicit trafficking of nuclear materials between 1993 and December 31 2001 Nuclear materials can be smuggled across a country s border through a variety of means they can be hidden in a car train or ship carried in personal luggage through an airport or walked across an unprotected border U S efforts to help other countries combat nuclear smuggling are divided among six federal agencies the Departments of Energy DOE State and Defense DOD the U S Customs Service the Federal Bureau of Investigation FBI and the U S Coast Guard From fiscal year 1992 through fiscal year 2001 the six agencies spent about 86 million to help 30 countries mostly in the former Soviet Union and Central and Eastern Europe combat the threat of smuggling nuclear and other materials that could be used in weapons of mass destruction Assistance provided by six agencies includes installing radiation detection equipment helping countries improve their ability to control the export of goods and technologies that could be used to develop nuclear weapons and providing other equipment and training to improve countries ability to prevent nuclear smuggling Although an interagency group chaired by the Department of State exists to coordinate U S assistance efforts the six agencies do not always work in unison The most troubling consequence of the lack of coordination is that DOE State and DOD have pursued separate approaches to installing radiation detection equipment at countries border crossings While U S assistance helps countries combat the smuggling of nuclear and other radioactive materials serious problems exist with the installation use and maintenance of equipment which has undermined U S efforts Customs relies on a three part strategy to combat nuclear smuggling training targeting and technology Customs officials rely on radiation pagers personal radiation detectors designed to be worn on a belt as the primary equipment to detect nuclear material However DOE officials view the pagers as personal safety devices not search instruments and that they are not designed to detect weapons usable nuclear material

NUCLEAR NONPROLIFERATION: U.S. Efforts to Help Other Countries Combat Nuclear Smuggling Need Strengthened Coordination and Planning, 2002 Illicit trafficking in or smuggling of nuclear and other radioactive materials occurs worldwide and has reportedly increased in recent years According to the International Atomic Energy Agency¹ IAEA as of December 31 2001 there had been 151 confirmed cases of illicit trafficking of nuclear material since 1993 See app I for more information about nuclear smuggling cases A significant number of the cases reported by IAEA involved material that could be used to produce a nuclear weapon or a device that uses conventional explosives with radioactive material dirty bomb to spread radioactive contamination over a wide area Nuclear material can be smuggled across a country s border through a variety of means it can be hidden in a car train or ship carried in personal luggage through an airport or walked across an unprotected border Many nuclear smuggling cases have been traced to nuclear material that originated in the countries of the former Soviet Union The United States through the Department of Energy s Material Protection Control and Accounting MPC A program has helped these countries secure nuclear material at civilian and defense facilities this effort is considered the first line of defense against potential theft and or diversion of nuclear materials To address the threat posed by nuclear smuggling the United States is helping these countries improve their border security a second line of defense but these assistance efforts face daunting challenges³ For example Russia alone has almost 12 500 miles of borders with 14 countries including North Korea It is also in close geographical proximity to Afghanistan Iran and Iraq
