

Project description

Chlorophyll a is the primary photosynthetic pigment in plants. The chlorophyll content of leaves is a good indicator of plant health and growth. This project aims to develop a non-destructive method for measuring chlorophyll content in leaves using a portable device.

The device will use a light source to illuminate the leaf and a sensor to measure the reflected light. The sensor will be calibrated to measure the chlorophyll content of the leaf.

The project will be completed by the end of the semester. The results will be presented at the end of the semester.
