Psychological and Behavioral Aspects of Physical Disability James E. Lindemann, 2012-12-06 A relationship between the disciplines of psychology and medicine is evident in writings from the beginnings of recorded history This interaction was characterized in some epochs by mutual interest and support only to be followed by periods of relative disinterest During the past century there have been several formal attempts to acknowledge this interdependence and to revive and codify on a more permanent basis the working relationships between practitioners and scientists from both psychology and medicine These twentieth century waves of interest which have also come and gone have been identified by such names as psychosomatic medicine and rehabilitation psychology For a variety of reasons notably the lack of a sufficient knowledge base in either discipline the desired partnership has not come to full flower This state of affairs seems to be changing as we enter the last two decades of the twentieth century In the American Psychologist in September 1980 I reviewed recent developments in psychology and in medicine and in federal and private funding patterns which give evidence of revitalizing this partnership between these two disciplines and their relevant subspecialties For example after six decades of spectacular biomedical scientific advances which have all but eradicated such life threatening diseases as polio myelitis and tuberculosis leaders in medicine the behavioral sciences and other segments of society reached a consensus during the 1970s that the behavior of the individual is one of today's unexplored frontiers for modern medical practice and related good health care

The Health and Social Needs of Young Adults with Physical Disabilities Andrew Thomas, Martin Bax, Diane Smyth, 1989 This book addresses a topic that has received surprisingly little attention to date the health and social needs of young adults with physical disabilities Following an extensive review of the contemporary literature on the subject the authors report an in depth study on a large sample of physically disabled 18 to 25 year olds living in two survey areas one urban and one semirural The study which included pediatric examinations and interviews by a social psychologist found that a large proportion of subjects face social and medical problems for instance They have serious health needs that are not being met by the statutory services they left school with less than adequate skills to enable them to lead an independent adult life they are without a daytime occupation or attend day centers that are described as unstimulating places they do not receive all the financial benefits to which they are entitled they are isolated from their peers and lack the social skills to interact with others in a positive and successful way Parents and guardians were also found to receive little physical or emotional support These findings underline the need for a better system of providing and coordinating services for this client group and the authors call for the formation within each local health authority area of an Adult Disability Service that would have a clinical and planning role in terms of health care and that would act as a linchpin in the coordination of health educational social and voluntary services Although this work relates specifically to service provision in the United Kingdom it is felt that the conclusions and recommendations are also broadly applicable to the situation in other countries
