V. Lambert,2004 Florida has the largest proportion of elderly in the nation 2 8 million persons are over age 65 representing 17 6% of its total population The dramatic rise in the number of persons age 65 and over in Florida over the next 20 years estimated to total 26.3% of total population will further stretch the already limited resources of the state. Aware of the pressing demand for long term care services well into the 21 century policymakers in Florida have begun seriously to review options for improving financing and delivery of long term care for the frail elderly and persons with disabilities. Federal and state Medicaid spending in Florida was 2.6 billion in FY2001 and 30.5% of Medicaid spending was for long term care. In FY2001 75.3% of total Medicaid spending was for institutional care. Slightly less than 25% of Medicaid spending was channeled towards home and community based services. Although institutional care dominated Medicaid spending there has been slow but steady expansion of home and community based services funding both through the use of Medicaid's waiver programs as well as significant support through state sources. Among the major issues facing long term care in Florida are the fragmentation of long term care services among state and local agencies, an imbalance in financing that favors institutional care rather than home and community based care, shortage of health care workers and well trained staff throughout the long term care and disparities in availability of services across the state.

Autonomy and Long-term Care George J. Agich, 1993. The realities and misconceptions of long term care and the challenges it presents for the ethics of autonomy are analyzed in this perceptive work. While defending the concept of autonomy the author argues that the standard view of autonomy as non interference and independence has only a limited applicability for long term care. He explains that autonomy should be understood as a comprehensiveness that defines the overall course of a person's life rather than as a way of responding to an isolated situation. Agich distinguishes actual and ideal autonomy and argues that actual autonomy is better revealed in the everyday experiences of long term care than in dramatic conflict ridden paradigm situations such as decisions to institutionalize, to initiate aggressive treatments or to withhold or to withdraw life sustaining treatments. Through a phenomenological analysis of long term care he develops an ethical framework for it by showing how autonomy is actually manifest in certain structural features of the social world of long term care. Throughout this timely work the rich sociological and anthropological literature on aging and long term care is referenced and the practical ethical questions of promoting and enhancing the exercise of autonomy are addressed.

Handbook of Long-Term Care Administration and Policy Cynthia Massie Mara, Laura Olson, 2008-03-27. Attitudes toward long term care contain a strong residue of negativity in today's society and current problems with the system augment such perceptions. Unless dealt with now this will only get worse as the 85 and older crowd is the fastest growing part of the population and the first wave of Baby Boomers is approaching 60. Exploring and delineating
