

Between Political Economy and Cultural Studies: Towards a Refinement of American Critical Communication Research

Critical communication research in the United States may well be on the brink of a radical rethinking and rearticulation of its central problematic. Conducted primarily within the bounds of political economy, U.S. researchers have assembled an impressive array of political economic analyses of media industries and telecommunications policies (e.g., Danielian, 1939; Gandy, 1983; Guback, 1969; Mosco, 1982; Schiller, 1973; Smythe, 1957; Wasko, 1982, etc.). Augmenting this research has been a series of critical reflections on the state of communication research in the U.S. (e.g., Smythe, 1954; Gitlin, 1978) that has probed into the mainstream's theoretical and methodological assumptions revealing a deep-seated, often unspoken commitment to functionalism and psychologistic individualism. These theoretical commitments have been tied by critical researchers back into the mainstream's methodological commitment to variable analysis, which itself rests on an assumption that human and social experience can be separated into discrete particles for measurement and manipulation. For the past thirty years, then, this dialectic of research and critique has driven U.S. critical scholars. Similarly, in Britain, critical scholars, principally at the Leicester Centre, have combined political economy with a particularly sharp critique of the U.S. mainstream (e.g., Murdock and Golding, 1974, 1978; Halloran, 1981; Curran, Gurevitch, Woollacott, 1982, and Elliott, 1974). This meshed with the American work to form an especially strong and unified approach. Thus, for U.S. researchers, the focus for critical work was tightly centered on industrial structure with a tendency towards a reflection theory of ideology and reception. For Americans, until recently cross-fertilization with British critical research was limited primarily to the Leicester political economists.

However, unlike the U.S. where cultural studies has been largely in the hands of neo-Boasian idealists (Berger, 1973; Carey, 1978; Carey and Kreiling, 1974; Cawelti, 1971; Kreiling, 1978; Newcomb, 1974), in the U.K. an independent cultural studies rooted in materialist notions of collectivity and lived experience also flourished (e.g., Hall, 1980 a & b; Hall et al., 1978; Hebdige, 1979;

From Corporate to Social Media Marisol Sandoval, 2014-03-05 The corporate and the social are crucial themes of our times. In the first decade of the twenty-first century, both individual lives and society were shaped by capitalist crisis and the rise of social media. But what marks the distinctively social character of social media? And how does it relate to the wider social and economic context of contemporary capitalism? The concept of Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR) is based on the idea that a socially responsible capitalism is possible; this suggests that capitalist media corporations can not only enable social interaction and cooperation but also be socially responsible. This book provides a critical and provocative perspective on Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR) in media and communication industries. It examines both the academic discourse on CSR and actual corporate practices in the media sector, offering a double critique that reveals contradictions between corporate interests and social responsibilities. Marisol Sandoval's political economic analysis of Apple, AT&T, Google, HP, Microsoft, News Corp, The Walt Disney Company, and Vivendi shows that media and communication in the twenty-first century are confronted with fundamental social responsibility challenges. From software patents and intellectual property rights to privacy on the Internet, from working conditions in electronics manufacturing to hidden flows of eWaste, this book encourages the reader to explore the multifaceted social responsibilities that shape commercial media landscapes today. It makes a compelling argument for thinking beyond the corporate in order to envision and bring about truly social media. It will interest students and scholars of media studies, cultural industry studies, sociology, information society studies, organization studies, political economy, business, and management.
