Prevention and Management of Osteoporosis World Health Organization, 2003-12-31 Bone is hard tissue that is in a constant state of flux being built up by bone forming cells called osteoblasts while also being broken down or resorbed by cells known as osteoclasts During childhood and adolescence bone formation is dominant bone length and girth increase with age ending at early adulthood when peak bone mass is attained Males generally exhibit a longer growth period resulting in bones of greater size and overall strength In males after the age of 20 bone resorption becomes predominant and bone mineral content declines about 4% per decade Females tend to maintain peak mineral content until menopause at which time it declines about 15% per decade Osteoporosis is a disease characterized by low bone mass and structural deterioration of bone tissue leading to bone fragility and an increased susceptibility to fractures especially of the hip spine and wrist Osteoporosis occurs primarily as a result of normal ageing but can arise as a result of impaired development of peak bone mass e.g. due to delayed puberty or undernutrition or excessive bone loss during adulthood e.g. due to estrogen deficiency in women undernutrition or corticosteroid use Osteoporosis induced fractures cause a great burden to society Hip fractures are the most serious as they nearly always result in hospitalization are fatal about 20% of the time and produce permanent disability about half the time Fracture rates increase rapidly with age and the lifetime risk of fracture in 50 year old women is about 40% similar to that for coronary heart disease In 1990 there were 1.7 million hip fractures alone worldwide with changes in population demographics this figure is expected to rise to 6 million by 2050 To help describe the nature and consequences of osteoporosis as well as strategies for its prevention and management a WHO Scientific Group meeting of international experts was held in Geneva which resulted in this technical report This monograph describes in detail normal bone development and the causes and risk factors for developing osteoporosis The burden of osteoporosis is characterized in terms of mortality morbidity and economic costs Methods for its prevention and treatment are discussed in detail for both pharmacological and non pharmacological approaches For each approach the strength of the scientific evidence is listed The report also provides cost analysis information for potential interventions and discusses important aspects of developing national policies to deal with osteoporosis Recommendations are made to the general population care providers health administrators and researchers Lastly national organizations and support groups are listed by country

Cassel, Rosanne Leipzig, Harvey Jay Cohen, Eric B. Larson, Diane E. Meier, 2006-05-29 Since the publication of the third edition of Geriatric Medicine extraordinary advances have occurred in the science of aging and the potential for biomedical research to give us answers to many if not most of the age related disorders that threaten the quality of life in older years At the most basic level the successful mapping of the human genome was declared complete in the fall of 2000 Understanding the map of the human genome is as important as understanding the map of genomes of important laboratory species ranging from the microscopic worms and fruit flies used in most classic genetic studies to rodents such as laboratory mice and eventually to primates on which much of the research on the aging human brain is done The genetic maps of all of these species including our own does not answer clinical questions but it does open the door to dramatic rapid and efficient answers to questions about the genetic polymorphisms related to diseases in humans The telomerase story also unfolded since the third edition Telomerase is an enzyme responsible for maintaining the telomeres the redundant DNA portions at the end of chromosomes whose shortening seems to be linked directly to cell senescence apoptosis and the control over cell death which at the level of the individual cell seems to be linked to the decline of organ function and eventually aging and death within the organism
