returned to the woods to conduct an experiment in living. For two years, he lived in a cabin which he had built on the shores of Walden Pond near Concord in Massachusetts. Here he spent many hours contemplating the wonders of nature. With time, human contact during these years, the woodland birds became his constant companions and he devoted much of his writing to observations of their behavior.

In birds, he discovered kindred spirits, and he marveled at the simplicity and freedom of their lives. The experience at Walden gave rise to a lifelong fascination with birds and ultimately shaped Thoreau's philosophy on nature.

PROJECT INFORMATION

One way of getting your backyard birding experience to go further is to become involved in a project. This is one for the Laboratory of Ornithology at Cornell University. Birds generally follow a regular routine. They do the same things—feeding, preening, bathing—at the same time, and for the same length of time, each day. Even if you only attract a few common species, being able to watch them at different times of the day, for as long as you want is a great way to learn more about them.

Watching birds in the yard will also help you learn your identification skills. In the field, most songbirds move quickly and keep their distance from humans. Difficult to see, they are even harder to watch. Feeders and nestboxes bring the birds to the observer, and if the birds feel well protected, they will become confident enough to spend long periods close to buildings and people. This makes it far easier for you identify them and learn about them by watching field guides like our 14 Birdfinder (p. 84).
