Nature, Nurture, and the Transition to Early Adolescence Stephen A. Petrill Department of Biobehavioral Health and the Center for Developmental and Health Genetics Pennsylvania State University, London Robert Plomin Research Professor in Behavioural Genetics Institute of Psychiatry, London John C. DeFries Professor of Psychology and Faculty Fellow Institute of Psychiatry, University of Colorado John K. Hewitt Professor of Psychology and Director Both at Institute for Behavioral Genetics, 2003-03-05 Some of the most intriguing issues in the study of cognitive social emotional and physical development arise in the debate over nature versus nurture a debate difficult to resolve because it is difficult to separate the respective contributions of genes and environment to development The most powerful approach to this separation is through longitudinal adoption studies The Colorado Adoption Project CAP is the only longitudinal adoption study in existence examining development continuously from birth to adolescence which makes it a unique powerful and tremendously valuable resource CAP is an ongoing assessment of 245 adopted children and 245 biological control children assessed from birth to early adolescence This book is the fourth in a series describing CAP results This latest volume edited by four eminent researchers in developmental psychology builds on the large body of research already generated by investigating the role of genes and environments on early adolescent development Because it is the only volume on the most comprehensive investigation of the effect of genes and environments on early adolescent development this work will be invaluable to researchers in developmental cognitive and social psychology

Students and lecturers alike will find this text addresses the issues of lifespan development in a rigorous and challenging way using a thematic rather than chronological approach. International and national research on graduate attributes consistently identifies critical thinking as one of the most important skills for psychology students. The inclusion of Critical Thinking for Group Discussion at the end of each chapter is designed to encourage students in the development of this key skill. These questions help students develop the ability to engage in discussions on truth and validity and evaluate the relative importance of ideas and data. Students learn by doing, and this is encouraged through interactive features such as Stop and Review, Research Focus Boxes, and Practical Exercises which engage them in group discussion and challenge them to delve into complex and cross-domain analysis of lifespan development. Concept maps at the start of each chapter provide students with a visual snapshot of the chapter content.
