

Policing in a democracy

'One element in defining a democratic society is a police force that:

- is subject to the rule of law embodying values respectful of human dignity, rather than the wishes of a powerful leader or party;
- can intervene in the life of citizens only under limited and carefully controlled circumstances; and
- is publicly accountable.'

Wiatrowski, 2016-05-13 Is it possible to create democratic forms of policing in transitional and developing societies This volume argues that policing models and practices promoted by the west are often inadequate for adoption by countries making democratic transitions because they do not adequately address issues such as human rights equity co production accountability openness and organizational change Therefore police reform is often limited to a one size fits all approach The book expands the dialogue so that discussions of democratic policing around the world are more realistic comprehensive and sensitive to the local context Detailed case studies on Iraq South Africa Northern Ireland and Kazakhstan provide a realistic assessment of the current state of policing The editors use the studies to suggest how to promote democratic policing and other important goals of democratic reform around the world The volume will assist academics policy makers NGOs and others in tailoring a local democratic policing strategy within a broader framework to enhance socioeconomic development and citizen capacity build social capital reduce various forms of conflict and support human rights Policing, Security and Democracy Menachem Amir, Stanley Einstein, 2001-01-01 This book the second volume of a series entitled The Uncertainty Series contains articles exploring the relationships of policing and security and how these issues relate to democracy both in theory and practice in the United States and around the world The articles are grouped under broad issues and the first concerns the theoretical relationship between police and democracy as well as community policing as the primary form of democratic policing Some topics include police consent problems in protecting civil and human rights conflicts between community and government changes within police governing power in terms of security and justice and facing the new information age The next section centers on issues of police and policing in places with a stable democratic system with articles on such countries as Australia Finland and Japan The following section concentrates on issues regarding policing in societies undergoing transition from repressive regimes to more liberal systems like Russia and China The last section deals with police confronting specific problems growing out of new technical or social developments while having to cope with existing forces in such places as Brazil and Africa Each article includes references glossary resources and tables
