The Handbook of Environmental Voluntary Agreements Edoardo Croci, 2005-10-06 EDOARDO CROCI IFEF Universit Bocconi Milano Italy Voluntary approaches in environmental policy represent a third wave of regulation in the environmental field Command and control was the first wave Its core is based on uniform emission standards the respect of which needs to be enforced through extensive monitoring and severe sanctions The expected cost of sanction for non compliance calculated as its amount multiplied for the probability to be caught must be superior to the benefits of non compliance in order to let the sanction be effective As the benefits of non compliance can vary among firms sanctions need to be very high in order to be effective In fact sanctions are ordinary correlated to environmental damage and not to the benefits of non compliance But very high sanctions can be difficult to enforce as they appear unfair and can lead to dramatic consequences on firms and workers up to shut downs of plants Ambient standards reduce these problems but oblige the regulator to know a huge amount of information regarding the specific contribution of each polluter to the polluted body Information is difficult to obtain because of asymmetric information and costly to produce because it requires large and skilled regulating and enforcing organizations Nevertheless complex regulation is the base of any environmental policy framework as it allows the policy maker to fully exercise its power of composition of various interests in a relatively transparent way Economic instruments were the second wave

Decision Making for Complex Socio-Technical Systems Thomas Flüeler,2006-03-08 Waste management can be considered as a mirror of society In its our fluctuating definition besides conserving a supply of valuable materials and resources it acts as a fascinating expression for our throw away mentality Waste is inevitable but it nevertheless provides an opportunity a need and an incentive for society to pursue a more careful management of it If this is successfully carried out society may well find it possible to manage itself in an overall more careful and universal way The management or governance of radioactive waste particularly is determined by a complex constellation of individuals social aggregates and institutions A wealth of interconnected parts forms a complex and volatile system that is highly technical and explosively political in nature The problems inherent in this system must be managed so as to reach a safe acceptable responsible feasible and sustainable solution It is a system with an objective long term dimension with a hazard potential of in part hundreds of thousands of years and it has a long term institutional dimension insofar as its implementation must last for decades The very notion of risk extends from the long life of radionuclides over the

Participation and the Quality of Environmental Decision Making F. Coenen, D. Huitema, Laurence J. O'Toole Jr., 2012-12-06 It is clear that our society must become a more sustainable one To that end we must change both our production and our consumption patterns Some argue that this implies the abolition of democratic processes and thus of citizens participation in environmental policy Others argue the opposite the only way to avoid impending environmental disaster is by engaging in common deliberation and contemplation Is participation then a negative force or not This volume is one of the first coordinated attempts to study the relationship between democratic participatory forms of decision making and the quality of environmental decisions The central question is how can the normatively desirable practice of participatory decision making be combined with an effective approach to environmental issues Guided by a theoretical introduction by the editors the 15 chapters deal with topics ranging from the scale of environmental problems local agenda 21 infrastructural decisions strategic planning to environmental policy in developing countries Three chapters are devoted to each of these broad themes Each presents either a theoretical or an empirical argument about the central research question shedding light on such issues as the measurement of decision quality participation techniques and the link between participation and decision quality drawing on experience gained in Europe North and South America Asia and Africa The introductions to the individual parts of the book have been collectively written by the contributors who represent a range of professional disciplines including political science public policy and planning

Institutional Dynamics in Environmental Governance Bas Arts, Pieter Leroy, 2006-09-09 Environmental policy in its broadest context has been significantly revitalized and renewed during the last two decades That observation is nothing new attested to by the number of publications conferences and both private and public projects that have been initiated However our understanding of the dynamics of this renewal has generally been informed by studies on single policies and projects leaving us with a limited understanding of what the newness consists of in terms of an integrated perspective This book presents fresh analyses of a number of well known cases but does so from one comprehensive view the so called policy arrangement approach Cases discussed range over organic farming integrated water management nature policy cultural heritage policy integrated region oriented policy corporate environmental management and target group policy always in search of the commonality of experience and conclusions to be drawn in understanding the past and in formulating future perspectives
