

building. In short, these include: (1) the presence of a 'clear development strategy'; (2) the capability to import technology ('branch-plants are better than no plants'); (3) the presence of 'synergy' between players; (4) the presence of 'long-term vision' to develop the region; (5) the identification of 'sources of innovation'; (6) the early establishment of networks ('mechanisms and channels for information to flow'); (7) appropriate distances of regions from core industrial centres; (8) the need for selectivity in 'longer-distance strategies' (that is, it may be necessary to focus on more appropriate areas that suit technopole development rather than use a 'scatter-shot strategy' that is politically acceptable but 'fails to build up momentum anywhere'); (9) 'major central inducements' (government funding); (10) capacity to 'identify new niches' (that is, a region is able to penetrate and capitalise on niche markets); (11) the presence of 'protective mechanisms' that will 'insulate the project, for a long period, against premature accusations of failure'; and finally (12) recognition that evaluation of regional development according to the 'most rigorous exclusive criteria' may overlook the possibility of other 'useful fall-out effects' (pp. 248–50).

The authors outline their intent in the opening paragraphs of their work as a desire 'to bring together in one descriptive-analytic account, the most important ventures in constructing technopoles worldwide' (p. 2). In the main, they follow truly to their course, and although some may consider the work more descriptive than analytical there are valuable insights to be gleaned from the work. The authors handle the multi-disciplinary nature of their topic well, moving between economics, history, sociology, planning, business and geography with commendable adroitness. They explore weighty contemporary issues and do well to illuminate an area often subject to considerable verbiage but little enlightenment. Overall, the work is an important, readable and valuable contribution to the literature on high technology and regional development. It is well worth examining if the reader's interests lie in this direction.

The Political Economy of Communication: Rethinking and Renewal

Vincent Mosco

London, Sage, 1996, x + 307 pp., AU$38.95, ISBN 0-8039-8561-4

The book is dedicated to students and so it is not unreasonable for students to ask: 'what does political economy have to do with communication?' In this book, Mosco responds to the question by offering a guide to political economy and how it can be used to study the media and communication.¹

From classical to postmodern theorists, Mosco takes on 'an inclusive, open, and non-reductionist perspective' into the study of the political economy of communication. While touching on various theoretical viewpoints, Mosco, nonetheless, provides some practical applications of the field.

The book is divided into two parts. In Part I, Mosco maps the political economy of communication and adopts a 'historical, descriptive and critical' approach. He starts off with the question 'What is Political Economy?' and defines it in terms of power relations between the production, distribution and consumption of resources. He proceeds on with a discussion of its central characteristics—social change and history, social totality, moral

Capitalizing on Culture Shane Gunster,2004-01-01 Building on the work of Theodor Adorno and Walter Benjamin Capitalizing on Culture presents an innovative accessible and timely exploration of critical theory in a cultural landscape dominated by capital Despite the increasing prevalence of commodification as a dominant factor in the production promotion and consumption of most forms of mass culture many in the cultural studies field have failed to engage systematically either with culture as commodity or with critical theory Shane Gunster corrects that oversight providing attentive readings of Adorno and Benjamin s work in order to generate a complex non reductive theory of human experience that attends to the opportunities and dangers arising from the confluence of culture and economics Gunster juxtaposes Benjamin s thoughts on memory experience and capitalism with Adorno s critique of mass culture and modern aesthetics to illuminate the key position that the commodity form plays in each thinker s work and to invigorate the dialectical complexity their writings acquire when considered together This blending of perspectives is subsequently used to ground a theoretical interrogation of the comparative failure of cultural studies to engage substantively with the effect of commodification upon cultural practices As a result Capitalizing on Culture offers a fresh examination of critical theory that will be valuable to scholars studying the intersection of culture and capitalism

How to Think about Information Dan Schiller,2024-04-22 It is common wisdom that the U S economy has adapted to losses in its manufacturing base because of the booming information sector with high paying jobs for everything from wireless networks to video games We are told we live in the Information Age in which communications networks and media and information services drive the larger economy While the Information Age may have looked sunny in the beginning as it has developed it looks increasingly ominous its economy and benefits grow more and more centralized and in the United States it has become less and less subject to democratic oversight Corporations around the world have identified the value of information and are now seeking to control its production transmission and consumption In How to Think about Information Dan Schiller explores the ways information has been increasingly commodified as a result and how it both resembles and differs from other commodities Through a linked series of theoretical historical and contemporary studies Schiller reveals this commodification as both dynamic and expansionary but also deeply conflicted and uncertain He examines the transformative political and economic changes occurring throughout the informational realm and analyzes key dimensions of the process including the buildup of new technological platforms the growth of a transnationalizing culture industry and the role played by China as it reinserts itself into an informationalized capitalism
