Integration Oliver Fratzscher, 2012-12-06 This dissertation looks at increasing trade integration from three angles First what are welfare implications of trade integration and trading blocks Second what mechanism can improve the sustainability of trade integration Third what relationship evolved between trade and foreign direct investment Chapter I starts by questioning Krugman's 1993 trading block model which suggested that world trade is increasingly conducted between three trading blocks which produces a minimum in world welfare His symmetrical trading block model is extended into a two sector model where trade is not only beneficial through increased varieties in a Dixit Stiglitz framework but also through comparative advantage Results show that i regionalism and multilateralism can be compatible and welfare enhancing ii sequential integration can monotonously increase world welfare iii more dissimilar countries have higher potential benefits from integration iv about one third of potential gains from free trade under average tariffs are already realized in a system of three trading blocks Chapter II studies the political sustainability of trade integration The previous trading block model is combined with a political pressure group model where domestic interest groups lobby their government to proceed with sequential trade integration Theory shows that trade integration is politically not sustainable viii Pre-let when consumers and producers interests are opposed unless a mechanism is designed which links sequential trade integration with factor reallocation and which worsens the best alternative to integration

The Political Economy of Trade Integration G. Oliver Fratzscher, 1994

The Political Economy of Trade Integration in South Asia Dushni Weerakoon, 2010 The South Asian regional trade integration process to date has generated only limited enthusiasm It suffers from significant shortcomings primarily on account of a very cautious approach adopted to achieve the ultimate objective of free trade within the region In turn this has led to a fragmentation of the integration process with some of the partners of the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation SAARC bloc opting for a speedier and more liberal bilateral process with India India s engagement remains the critical feature as the single most important trading partner for almost all the other South Asian countries However the dynamics of Indian economic integration initiatives too have been changing rapidly whereby it is looking increasingly to strengthen its economic relations with the wider Asian region In this context the question of India s willingness to give leadership to carry the rest of South Asia as the bridge that connects the region to East Asia needs to be examined The current evidence suggests that India has attempted to do so via a host of bilateral and regional arrangements but that the divergences in strategic interests amongst SAARC countries has left Pakistan on the margins of an evolving scheme of overlapping trade initiatives in South Asia Thus while something approximating free trade in South Asia appears to be taking shape it is unlikely to take the form of an inclusive South Asian regional integration process envisaged by SAARC

Votes, Vetoes, and the Political Economy of International Trade Agreements Edward D. Mansfield, Helen V. Milner, 2012-05-27 Preferential trading arrangements PTAs play an increasingly prominent role in the global political economy two notable examples being the European Union and the North American Free Trade Agreement These agreements foster economic integration among member states by enhancing their access to one another s markets Yet despite the importance of PTAs to international trade and world politics until now little attention has been focused on why governments choose to join them and how governments design them This book offers valuable new insights into the political economy of PTA formation Many economists have argued that the roots of these agreements lie in the promise they hold for improving the welfare of member states Others have posited that trade agreements are a response to global political conditions Edward Mansfield and Helen Milner argue that domestic politics provide a crucial impetus to the decision by governments to enter trade pacts Drawing on this argument they explain why democracies are more likely to enter PTAs than nondemocratic regimes and why as the number of veto players interest groups with the power to block policy change increases in a prospective member state the likelihood of the state entering a trade agreement is reduced The book provides a novel view of the political foundations of trade agreements book is one of the first attempts to analyze how developing countries through the early twenty first century have established systems of social protection and how these systems have been affected by the processes of globalization and democratization The book focuses on Latin America to identify factors associated with the evolution of welfare state policies during the pre globalization period prior to 1979 whilst studying how globalization and democratization have affected governments fiscal commitment to social spending In contrast with the Western European experience more developed welfare systems evolved in countries relatively closed to international trade while the recent process of globalization that has swept the region has put substantial downward pressure on social security expenditures Health and education spending has been relatively protected from greater exposure to international markets and has actually increased substantially with the shift to democracy The Political Economy of New Regionalism in Northeast Asia Chang Jae Lee,You-il Lee,John
