Understanding Canada: comparative political economy perspectives

JOHN MYERS Carleton University

The study of Canadian society has always been comparative. During the formative postwar years, Anglo-Canadian sociologists (Clark, Porter) and non-Canadians who studied Canada (Alford, Lipset) took as their points of contrast Britain, the United States and sometimes Australia (Brym with Fox, 1989). Canada was understood as a unique mixture of the 'old' and the 'new', at once British and American, with a distinct, mid-Atlantic, quality. The contrast with Britain and the United States provided both an analytical starting point for understanding Canada and a point of departure for criticizing Canadian social institutions. For Porter, Canada would have been well served by abandoning the class-ridden, elitist social traditions of the British and emulating the more open, meritocratic and dynamic political and social models that had emerged from the American experiment.

The late sixties changed all this. Vietnam, urban poverty, and race riots in the United States along with the discovery of the American empire in Canada undermined the progressive imagery associated with the American model and turned it upside down. In the seventies, the United States became the 'evil empire'. The analytical shift was equally important and gave birth to one of the more productive and exciting periods in Canadian social science scholarship in this century. The Canadian experience was no longer to be simply understood as an innocent or accidental mixture of two historical traditions. Instead, by drawing on Marx, Louis and Frank, the new political economy of the seventies adopted a much more relational view. During the twentieth century, Canada had moved from dependency on Britain to dependency on the United States. 'In the last instance,' Canada was to be understood as an 'effect' of these ongoing and changing relationships with the two great imperial powers of modern capitalism.

This point of departure at once opened and truncated the comparative framework within which Canada could be examined. It opened comparisons (often implausible) with the historical experience of the 'Third World' and especially Latin America. But as in the traditional approach, Canada was clearly located within the vortex of the Anglo-American triangle and rarely, if ever, were detailed and rigorous comparisons made with other

Carroll, 2011-11-01 Challenging standard dependency theory William Carroll argues from empirical evidence that Canada's financial industrial elite have maintained and consolidated their competitive position at the centre of an inter corporate network Corporate Power and Canadian Capitalism thus acknowledges the unusually high degree to which capital is concentrated in a relatively few giant corporations in Canada but it denies that these commercial interests are subordinated to American corporate capital To test the validity of this new perspective on the transformation of indigenous capitalists into a national bourgeoisie Carroll traces the accumulation of capital in the largest Canadian corporations and the institutional relations that have existed among the same firms since World War II Instead of selling out to foreign capital Canadian firms have in fact become increasingly interlocked and Canadian controlled firms have been and continue to be the focus of both the industrial and financial sectors with foreign controlled companies occupying decidedly peripheral positions From this interpretative position Canada's development is seen as markedly similar to that of other advanced capitalist countries culminating in consolidation of control under an elite accompanied both by penetration of foreign economies by domestic financial capitalists and a concomitant penetration of the domestic economy by foreign capital

Inside Capitalism; An Introduction to Political Economy Paul Phillips, 2007 These Days Almost Anyone Is Bound To Be Depressed By The Litany Of Economic Woes Besieging Canada Mainstream Economists Politicians And Business Leaders Claim That Workers Wages Must Fall That The Social Safety Net Must Be Stripped Away That Taxes Must Be Cut And That Environmental Regulations Must Be Relaxed There Is No Alternative We Are Told If Canada Is To Be Competitive But Is This Really The Case If We Are To Even Begin To Respond To This New Economic Mantra We Have To Know What Makes Our Economy Tick In Inside Capitalism Paul Phillips introduces us to political economic analysis that explains why firms behave as they do why we have such a high level of economic monopoly and who benefits from the economic structure of capitalism In so doing Phillips shows us that traditional economic analysis is mainly ideology Clearly the dismal prospects that average Canadians face are not the result of immutable economic laws but rather due to the political and economic power that business has amassed with the aid of successive governments and the Bank of Canada
