Reinventing Print David Jury,2018-07-12 With the rise of digital technology as a design tool and its acceptance as simply part of the tool chest for today's design studios there has been a re-evaluation and return to exploring pre-digital typography. Design studios no longer flaunt their digital hardware in fact quite the opposite. This attitudinal change toward digital technology has coincided with a growing fascination and re-evaluation of those pre-digital skills and processes that had been considered in recent years to be irrelevant. Mapping the rise of digital technology and examining the infinite possibilities it offers and the profound cultural and technical influence it has had in all aspects of visual communication. This text also focuses on our current post-digital age in which the technology itself has become sufficiently commonplace for us to fully recognize what it excels at and what it does less well. Reinventing Print focuses on those skills and processes which have been re-appropriated and irreverently liberated by a new generation of typographers, designers and artists raised with digital technology in their pockets and forever at their fingertips. In this post-digital age traditional typographic craft is new, different and therefore exciting, potent and culturally subversive.

Reinventing Babel in Medieval French Emma Campbell, 2023-09-09 How can untranslatability help us to think about the historical as well as the cultural and linguistic dimensions of translation? For the past two centuries theoretical debates about translation have responded to the idea that translation overcomes linguistic and cultural incommensurability while never inscribing full equivalence. More recently untranslatability has been foregrounded in projects at the intersections between translation studies and other disciplines notably philosophy and comparative literature. The critical turn to untranslatability re-emphasizes the importance of translation's negotiation with foreignness or difference and prompts further reflection on how that might be understood historically, philosophically and ethically. If translation never replicates a source exactly what does it mean to communicate some elements and not others? What or who determines what is translatable or what can or cannot be recontextualized? What linguistic, political, cultural or historical factors condition such determinations? Central to these questions is the way translation negotiates with and inscribes asymmetries among languages and cultures, operations that are inevitably ethical and political as well as linguistic. This book explores how approaching questions of translatability and untranslatability through premodern texts and languages can inform broader interdisciplinary conversations about translation as a concept and a practice. Working with case studies drawn from the francophone cultures of Flanders, England and northern France it explores how medieval texts challenge modern definitions of language, text and translation and in so doing how such texts can open sites of variance and non-identity within what later became the hegemonic global languages we know today.
