the entire work in fulfilling her ultimate kabbalistic task the return of the holy sparks dispersed among mankind at the creation to their original Source In this the Bride undergoes exile in the guise of a very human woman constantly changing identity species race color age and even sex ranging through many different mythical and historical settings raising a host of political issues from ecology to feminism and creating against Tarn's anthropological background an astonishing cosmos propelled by the eternal interaction of male and female Perhaps the author's most dramatic work the Lyrics reflect a time of personal tension and loss a time of exile from Europe transformed into a fervent adoption on a continental scale of his new American milieu Overall it is Tarn's expansive energetic worldview that makes the work cohere At a time when so much poetry lacks either head or heart Tarn clearly hopes that in the Lyrics both have full sway
