

The Problem with Girls

By Tim Mogford

PATRICK, a tween/teenage boy, is facing the audience. He looks deep in thought.

Do you know something I don't get? Girls. I don't get girls. I'm not dumb, I mean fractions didn't throw me at all and I can count to ten in three completely different languages, so I'm not an idiot. Is what I'm saying. But I feel like an idiot when it comes to girls. Like, pretty much all the time. It's not just that they seem to know stuff my friends and me don't. Stuff about – I don't know, feelings and what you're supposed to do in life. And it's not that they're all taller than me. I mean they were, not that long ago. Taller, and louder. And a bit scary, actually. But not any more. I grew four inches this summer and I can lift pretty heavy things no problem, so I'm not freaked out that way now.

No, what I'm talking about is the other stuff. Like – well, what they do to your legs for one thing. And your mouth. I can walk normally ninety-nine percent of the time. I mean, jeeze- I can run when I play sports. Pretty well, too. I can beat most of the guys on the team. Half of them at least. I can run. But when I'm trying to walk in the hallway at school – you know, la di da di da – perfectly normal. Talking to my friends blah blah. Well then Kara Nealey appears at the end of the hallway. And she's walking towards me, and I'm like, "OK – here comes Kara Nealey. She's hot. Don't mess up." And boom! My legs like – stop working properly, and before you know it I'm stumbling into the lockers like an idiot pretending Jake pushed me. Which is OK, because sometimes she looks at Jake and he puts on that fake "yeah you wish you had me" grin on his face and she laughs.

That's another thing – why does she find that so funny? I mean, he's just copying the guy on that jeans commercial we saw on TV during the Jets game, and believe me Jake does not look like a model. Jake looks like a moron. Completely different thing. But Kara Nealey laughs. And yet when I tell her that joke about the three skunks in the dog house that everybody laughs at- I mean even my Grandma thinks it's the best joke ever – when I tell her that joke she just looks at me and keeps talking to that Zoe Fisher.

So anyway, my legs hate me when I see Kara Nealey and I don't get why. But when that happened the last time she didn't just ignore the whole thing and say, like, "OMG Boys are so dumb." No – last time she actually stopped talking to that Zoe Fisher and came over to me and then asked me if I was OK. Well, of course I was OK, cause – duh! – I just tripped, I didn't actually fall into anything but my acting made it look like that. I think I might become an actor, actually. I'm pretty good. So she asks if I'm OK, and I think "Yes! Kara Nealey is asking me if I'm OK. This is – you know – cool." So I look up at her, and I'm putting on the jeans commercial grin, like "you wish I was your boyfriend and you could take care of my injuries." I mean if Jake can do it, then for a real actor like me it's bound to work.
