Knowledge under Construction Daniel Ness, Stephen J. Farenga, 2007-03-26 Knowledge under Construction investigates how young children develop spatial geometric and scientific thinking skills particularly those associated with architecture Based on original research and analysis of videotapes of children's play with blocks the authors' findings suggest that such play is anything but pointless Their conclusions fill in gaps in our current understanding of how children learn to think spatially and scientifically even while challenging portions of that understanding including some of Piaget's thesis about the primacy of topological space in children's learning A system of measurement developed to identify and categorize children's spontaneous behavior at play allows adults to observe patterns of behavior as children play and record the development of process skills and cognitive abilities enhancing our understanding of how children begin to learn about space and architectural relationships The book also examines the educational implications of our enhanced understanding One possible development is a new alternative way to measure cognitive abilities and development in children based on their work with blocks Fear Itself ,2010-01-01 What are fear horror and terror This question central to our endeavour cannot be answered by one unified voice It always cracks falters and fades before it can fully enunciate its proclamation We the authors know this and have planned accordingly This volume presents meditations on this issue springing from the four corners of intellectual inquiry Each author provides a distinctive approach with which to address the issue at hand Literary theory psychoanalysis media studies political science and many more disciplines occupy the same space between the covers of this book We hope that through the cacophony of our diversity we will fill in the inevitable gaps when our voices fall short
