The risky operation to recover a sub, its two nuclear reactors, 22 missiles and an ill-fated crew

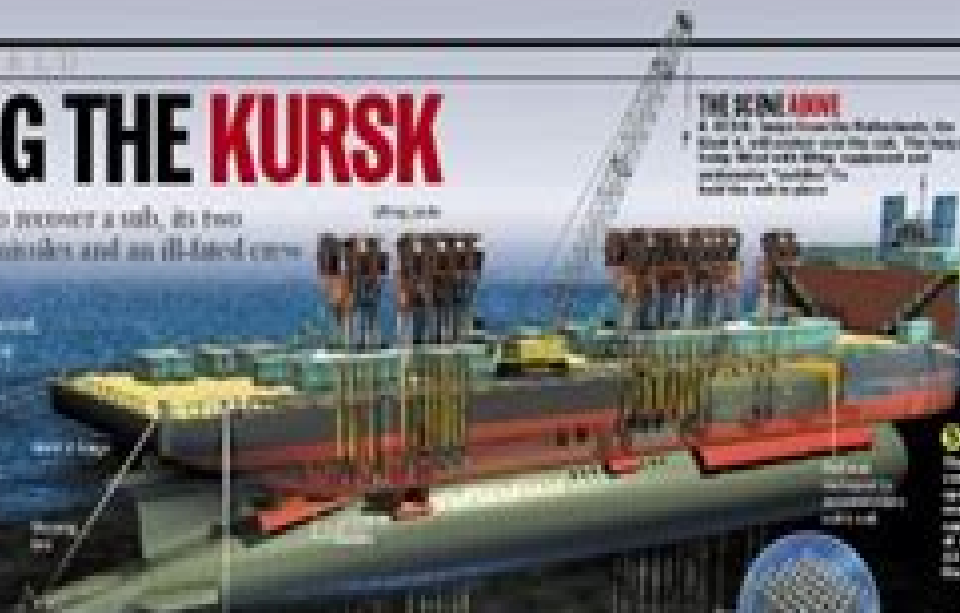

A year after the Russian nuclear submarine Kursk mysteriously disappeared and sank with 119 people aboard, an international team is trying to raise the wrecked ship from 107 meters (350 feet) below the surface. The team's mission is scheduled to begin this summer, pending approval from the Russian government. The operation is being led by the Russian Navy, which would be led by the sea force along with the command of the project.
