Hypermedia Dan H. Wishnietsky, 1992 Hypermedia is not a single technology it is an integrated electronic environment that combines text audio and video into one large file Users can explore information about a subject using several technologies at the same time Although the technical foundation for hypermedia was established in the early 1970s it was not until the late 1980s and early 1990s that the hardware for supporting hypermedia became readily available In a hypermedia system each component of stored information is a node and the nodes are connected by paths The paths that a user travels are determined by interest experience and need Hypermedia systems have many classroom applications and can revolutionize a student's view of learning with the hardware and software currently available. As hypermedia technology develops, the educational environment will advance beyond lectures, notetaking, and other common forms of learning. Edutainment, the combining of education and entertainment, and virtual reality are extensions of hypermedia that promise to improve the learning environment. A 13-item resource list cites the names and addresses of organizations and journals that provide information about hypermedia.

SLD Japanese and U.S. Education Compared Edward R. Beauchamp, 1992. This document presents a comparative analysis of education in Japan and the United States. The report explores differences between U.S. and Japanese culture. While the United States may be characterized by its diversity, Japanese culture is distinctive in the extent of its uniformity. Japan moreover has a highly centralized educational system. U.S. education is extremely decentralized. Education is compulsory in both countries until age 16 in most U.S. states and until 15 in Japan. While many students in the United States work or participate in other activities, Japan tends to view schooling as a student's job. Japanese students face a longer school year and a more rigorous government-controlled curriculum than do their U.S. counterparts. In Japan, teaching is a more highly respected and rewarded field than it is in the United States. There are major attitudinal differences concerning schooling in the two countries. The United States tends to emphasize students' abilities, while the Japanese place greater emphasis on persistence and personal responsibility. From the Japanese system, the United States can learn: 1) the true value of taking education seriously; 2) the need to raise academic standards; and 3) the ability to spend wisely on education. LBG Asking the Right Question Selma Wassermann, 1992. Understanding the potential power of questions to promote thoughtful examination is at the heart of classroom teaching. If classroom discussions are to bear fruit with students examining issues intelligently, teachers must develop an awareness of and be sensitive to how questions are framed. Good questions follow an interactive rhythm that produces reflection rather than interrogation, building trust in the interactive relationship. This booklet is organized into four parts and addresses the following topics: 1) several categories of unproductive questions that do little or nothing to promote meaningful examination of ideas; 2) questions that may call for students to examine ideas but the framing of which defeats more productive examination; 3) effective questioning which helps students to think more intelligently about important issues under study; and 4) guidelines for a well-orchestrated discussion. In conclusion, it is suggested that the art of questioning is learned more through experience than in any preparatory program. An analysis of individual questioning styles and a tally sheet for self-examination of questioning are appended.

Gordon, 1993 Focuses on the need for educational opportunities in work place environments State Academies for the Academically Gifted James E. Green, 1993 This guide to residential state academies for academically gifted high school students discusses the history of this movement student characteristics curricula faculty outreach programs and evaluation The establishment of the nine existing state institutions is traced from the prototype the North Carolina School for Science and Mathematics to the most recent established in Alabama in 1991 Reasons for such schools are given ranging from the specialized curricula needed by such students to their need for peer support The question of elitism is addressed suggesting that such schools actually are egalitarian in that they provide an opportunity for all students from both poor and wealthy regions of the state to go as far as they can The various selection processes are described and compared noting that the use of holistic methods rather than standardized tests results in enrollments more consistent with the demographic profiles of the state's population Curricula are discussed with special focus on the Indiana Academy Curriculum Criteria for selecting faculty are then briefly considered as are state academy outreach programs The lack of comprehensive and systematic evaluation of these new institutions is noted Contains 21 references DB
