Patrick Vinton Kirch,1994 Scholars and researchers have long believed that the ability to irrigate is crucial to the development of civilizations In this book archaeologist Patrick Kirch challenges this hydraulic hypothesis and provides a more accurate and detailed account of the role of wet and dry cultivation systems in the development of complex sociopolitical structures Examining research on cultural adaptation and ecology in Western Polynesia and utilizing extensive data from a variety of important South Pacific sites Kirch not only reveals how particular systems of production developed within the constraints imposed by environmental conditions but also explores the tension that arises between contrasting productive systems with differential abilities to produce surplus He shows that the near total neglect of short fallow dryland cultivation as well as arboriculture or tree cropping has seriously distorted the picture that archaeologists and anthropologists have of agricultural intensification and its relation to complex social structure This work likely to become a classic will be central to all future discussions of the ecology and politics of agricultural intensification      The Pacific is the largest geographical feature on the face of the earth covering about one third of its entire surface Occupying part of that large expanse are the far flung islands of the Pacific As the papers of this volume clearly indicate the post world war II era and decolonization have brought unprecedented change and the Pacific is now experiencing problems that were formerly associated with other Third World nations Most Pacific countries have rapidly expanding populations and over half of all Pacific Islanders are now in their teenage years or younger Education and modern communications have served to increase aspirations and attracted by hopes of employment and the distractions of urban life islanders are gravitating to urban centers

Taking the High Ground Atholl Anderson, Douglas J. Kennett, 2012-11-01 This volume brings the remote and little known island of Rapa firmly to the forefront of Polynesian archaeology Thirteen authors contribute 14 chapters covering not only the basic archaeology of coastal sites rock shelters and fortifications but faunal remains agricultural development and marine exploitation The results presented within a chronology framed by Bayesian analysis are set against a background of ethnohistory and ethnology Highly unusual in tropical Polynesian archaeology are descriptions of artefacts of perishable material Taking the High Ground provides important insights into how a group of Polynesian settlers adapted to an isolated and in some ways restrictive environment

The Rahui Tamatoa Bambridge, 2016-03-22 This collection deals with an ancient institution in Eastern Polynesia called the rahui a form of restricting access to resources and or territories While tapu had been extensively discussed in the scientific literature on Oceanian anthropology the rahui is quite absent from secondary modern literature This situation is all the more problematic because individual actors societies and states in the Pacific are readapting such concepts to their current needs such as environment regulation or cultural legitimacy This book assembles a comprehensive collection of current works on the rahui from a legal pluralism perspective This study as a whole underlines the new assertion of identity that has flowed from the cultural dimension of the rahui Today rahui have become a means for indigenous communities to be fully recognised on a political level Some indigenous communities choose to restore the rahui in order to preserve political control of their territory or in some cases to get it back For the state better control of the rahui represents a way of asserting its legitimacy and its sovereignty in the face of this reassertion by indigenous communities
