There is strong evidence that population ageing and the epidemiological transition to a higher incidence of chronic, non-communicable diseases will continue to profoundly impact societies worldwide, putting more pressure on healthcare systems to respond to the needs of the people they serve. These trends argue for the need to address what matters to people about their health: limitations in their functioning that affect their day-to-day actions and goals in life. From its inception, rehabilitation, 1 of the 4 health strategies identified in the Declaration of Alma Ata in 1978, has had functioning as its outcome of interest. Its practitioners are from fields that include physical and rehabilitation medicine, occupational therapy, physiotherapy, speech and language therapy, orthotics and prosthetics, psychology, and evaluators of functioning interventions, including assistive technologies. Demographic and epidemiological trends suggest that the key indicators of the health of populations will be not merely mortality and morbidity, but functioning as well. This, in turn, suggests that the primary focus of healthcare will need to respond to actual healthcare demands generated by the need for long-term management of chronic conditions, including, in particular, the scaling up and strengthening of rehabilitation. This is the case for thinking that rehabilitation will become the key health strategy of the 21st century.

Key words: rehabilitation; health strategy; functioning.

There is strong evidence that fundamental demographic and epidemiological trends (global ageing and the transition to a higher incidence and prevalence of chronic, non-communicable diseases), as well as advances in curative medicine, will profoundly impact societies worldwide. These trends, and their drivers and immediate consequences, arguably point to a significant shift in emphasis in healthcare and health policy to the long-term management of chronic conditions and impairments, which is the natural domain of rehabilitation.

The objectives of this paper are to assemble the best demographic and epidemiological evidence about future trends, in order to build on the current conceptualization of the health strategy of rehabilitation, compared with other health strategies, and, utilizing the powerful notion of functioning as a health indicator, set out the best case for the proposition that rehabilitation is the key health strategy for the 21st century.

WORLDWIDE POPULATION AGEING

Both the absolute number and proportion of the population of older people are increasing dramatically worldwide (1). Population ageing (the increasing proportion of older persons in the population) is arguably one of the most significant social transformations of the 21st century, with direct and obvious implications for healthcare and health policy, for many other sectors of society, including labour, housing, transportation, social protection, and for the very structure of families and intergenerational ties.

As Fig. 1 shows, the population worldwide aged 60 years or older is increasing dramatically (2, 3). Although currently high income countries, such as Japan, Germany and Finland, have the highest prevalence of older persons, in 30 years time 80% of the world population aged 60 years or older will live in low- and middle-income countries (3). Globally, the number of people over 60 years of age is increasing faster than any other age group (1).

These population ageing trends are not only unprecedented in human history, they affect all regions of the world. Ageing rates, moreover, will increase over time (4).

There are 2 key drivers of population ageing: increasing life expectancy and declining fertility rates (1). Both of these phenomena are the result of worldwide socioeconomic development and, especially, the astonishing success of healthcare over the last several decades. In high-income countries, increased life expectancy is principally the result of improved survival of people age 60 years or over; while in low-income countries reduced mortality at younger ages is more influential (1). In the last 30 years, especially, people have been surviving diseases and injuries (even as serious as spinal cord injury and cancer) that would in

The Oxford Handbook of the Baroque John D. Lyons,2019-08-08 Few periods in history are so fundamentally contradictory as the Baroque the culture flourishing from the mid sixteenth to the mid eighteenth centuries in Europe When we hear the term Baroque the first images that come to mind are symmetrically designed gardens in French chateaux scenic fountains in Italian squares and the vibrant rhythms of a harpsichord Behind this commitment to rule harmony and rigid structure however the Baroque also embodies a deep fascination with wonder excess irrationality and rebellion against order The Oxford Handbook of the Baroque delves into this contradiction to provide a sweeping survey of the Baroque not only as a style but also as a historical cultural and intellectual concept With its thirty eight chapters edited by leading expert John D Lyons the Handbook explores different manifestations of Baroque culture from theatricality in architecture and urbanism to opera and dance from the role of water to innovations in fashion from mechanistic philosophy and literature to the tension between religion and science These discussions present the Baroque as a broad cultural phenomenon that arose in response to the enormous changes emerging from the sixteenth century the division between Catholics and Protestants the formation of nation states and the growth of absolutist monarchies the colonization of lands outside Europe and the mutual impact of European and non European cultures Technological developments such as the telescope and the microscope and even greater access to high quality mirrors altered mankind s view of the universe and of human identity itself By exploring the Baroque in relation to these larger social upheavals this Handbook reveals a fresh and surprisingly modern image of the Baroque as a powerful response to an epoch of crisis bondage in India's changing political economy from 1962 to 2017 Focusing on what has happened since Independence he argues that colonial rule changed the country's agrarian economy Capitalism has led to progressive inequality lack of welfare and the exclusion of the dispossessed from mainstream society Unmaking Waste Sarah Newman, 2023-05-26 In Unmaking Waste Sarah Newman asks what happens when there are disagreements about what constitutes waste and what one should do with it both at singular moments in time for example when ideas about waste collide in emerging colonial contexts and across time such as between those who left things behind in the past and the archaeologists who recover them Newman examines ancient Mesoamerican understandings of waste Euro American perceptions of waste in New Spain and early modern European ideals of civility and Christian understandings of good and bad expressed metaphorically through cleanliness and filth These differing perceptions Newman argues demands that we rethink centuries of assumptions imposed on other places times and peoples so long as waste remains a category misunderstood to be common sensical and stable archaeological methods will prove unequal to their task Newman instead proposes anamorphic archaeology an approach that emphasizes the possibility that archaeological objects have multiple physical and conceptual lives
