

A chilled crystal glass, the perfect pin, a touch of dry vermouth—suddenly dollars are stacked and a party goes off. The Martini was and still is more than just a cocktail. Originally mixed in the immigrant primary, it became an American taste in the twentieth, and the favorite drink of such luminaries as Franklin D. Roosevelt, Winston Churchill, Jack London, and Ernest Hemingway. Bernard DeVoto called the Martini the "supreme American gift to world culture," while H. L. Menckes declared it "the only American invention as perfect as a secret."

The Martini celebrates the drink's resonance with a colorful look at the fascinating world of the American Dream. As author Barry Conrad III notes, the very word Martini is "a midnight passport to another era . . . when women wore corset laces at dinner, when men wore hats (and) when a dud ran there on a handbike." Along with this fascinating look, a fabulous array of Martini-inspired art, captions, collectibles, advertisements, and film rolls reveal how deeply this classic cocktail permeates every aspect of American culture, from literature and film to politics and high society.

Complete with fascinating facts, traditional Martini recipes, and literary recipes, as well as remarkable stories from James Bond movies and more, The Martini celebrates this ultimate spirit for publication, whether you prefer it with an olive or a twist.

THE Martini

Barry Conrad III is the author of La Chino de Paris, Shanghai Henry, It's a Book, Jim, Agony (ed. by Clarence Budge), and Chin Henry in Heaven. A graduate of Yale College, he lives in San Francisco.
