Electrochromic Polymers: Synthesis and Properties

Electrochromic polymers are a class of materials that can change their optical absorption and color in response to an applied electric field. This property is due to the reversible redox reactions of the polymer chains, which alter their electronic structure and thus their absorption spectrum. These materials have a wide range of applications, including smart windows, anti-counterfeit security features, and electrochromic displays. The synthesis of electrochromic polymers typically involves the electrochemical polymerization of monomers containing conjugated backbones and electrochromic groups. The resulting polymer films can be tuned to exhibit various colors and optical properties by controlling the synthesis conditions and the chemical structure of the monomers.
