Water Quality Policy and Management in Asia Cecilia

Tortajada,2014-10-14 Asia's 48 countries have an estimated 1.757 billion urban population and 2.4 billion people in rural areas or approximately 60 per cent of the global population Divided into central eastern southern south eastern and western regions the continent is also extremely heterogeneous in terms of water quality conditions The policies and management practices vary significantly from one country to another and even within one country depending on specific economic political social environmental legal and institutional factors In order to appreciate the complexities associated with water quality policy and management it is important to acknowledge the multiplicity of interrelated and often conflicting events issues actors and interests both within and outside the water sector that impact them This complexity alongside institutional inability for systematic and coordinated collaboration are potent reasons as to why in the second decade of the 21st century formulation and implementation of efficient water quality management policies benefitting humankind and the environment have still not been achieved The book was originally published as a special issue of the International Journal of Water Resources Development

The Earth as Transformed by Human Action B. L. Turner,William C. Clark,Robert W.

Kates,John F. Richards,Jessica T. Mathews,William B. Managed Realignment : A Viable Long-Term Coastal Management Strategy? Luciana S. Esteves,2014-07-14

Managed realignment has been a preferred coastal management strategy in England in the 21st century and has also been increasingly implemented elsewhere Climate change and environmental and financial concerns have led to a shift from the traditional hold the line approach of coastal protection towards more flexible soft engineering options Managed realignment is a relatively new soft engineering alternative aiming to provide sustainable flood risk management with added

environmental and socio economic benefits by creating space for coastal habitats to develop more dynamically The natural adaptive capacity of coastal habitats and the ecosystem services they provide underpin the sustainability of managed realignment However many definitions of managed realignment exist and the understanding of what the term actually represents in practice has evolved through time and varies regionally This book clarifies the definitions and terminology used in the literature and proposes that managed realignment is used as a general term that encompasses the many different methods of implementation worldwide including removal breach and realignment of defences controlled tidal restoration which includes regulated tidal exchange and controlled reduced tide and managed retreat These methods of implementation are explained and illustrated with examples from around the world In addition to a general overview of emerging policies and current practices specific chapters discuss approaches adopted in different locations including the Netherlands the UK and Maui USA The UK experience is presented from the perspectives of three sectors the National Trust a charity organisation that owns 10% of the coastline of England and Wales the Environment Agency the organisation responsible for implementing government policy concerning flood and erosion risk and a private consultant involved in the planning design and delivery of managed realignment projects Taking a wider perspective to consider the range of implementation methods the viability of managed realignment as a long term coastal management strategy is discussed Recent national and regional strategies worldwide give managed realignment an increasing role in climate change and flood risk management Gaining stakeholders and public support is fundamental for the success of emerging coastal management strategies However public perception and stakeholders engagement are often cited as a factor limiting the wider uptake of managed realignment Results from a recent survey are used to benchmark the current thinking about the potential the performance and the limitations of managed realignment in the UK and elsewhere Current opinions about managed realignment are often not clearly defined partly due to many projects being relatively recent There is a general perception of great potential to provide sustainable flood risk management with added environmental benefits However the views of stakeholders are considerably more negative and notably contrast with the views of practitioners and researchers The only clear and dominant agreement across all groups of respondents is that better understanding about the long term evolution of sites is needed

Pollution of the North Sea Wim Salomons, Brian L. Bayne, Egbert K. Duursma, Ulrich Förstner, 2012-12-06 This preface is being written at a time of exceptional public interest in the North Sea following media head lines on toxic algal blooms the mass mortality of common seals and concern over pollution levels These headlines may suggest that pollution of the North Sea is a recent event This is not the case Although no data are available methods simply did not exist it is safe to assume that emission both into air and water of heavy metals already started to increase in the 19th century The growth of cities and introduction of sewer systems led to the discharge of raw sewage and sewage sludge The introduction of man made xenobiotic organic chemicals and their subsequent emission into the North Sea commenced before the second world war The shallower and coastal areas of the North Sea receive the highest concentrations of these pollutants Not unexpectedly these areas some Norwegian fjords the Dutch coast the German Bight show signs of ecosystem deterioration and eutrophication A certain percentage of the pollutants does not remain in the North Sea but is exported to the Atlantic The North Sea therefore contributes to the global input of pollutants to the world's oceans The major part of the pollutants accumulate in the North Sea and are incorporated in the bottom sediments Although they are out of sight they should not be out of mind

Water Pollution Biology, Second Edition P.D. Abel, 2002-09-11 Presents an examination of the scale of water pollution problems and through case studies explores the type of investigations biologists need to undertake in solving them The text draws comparisons between British and European practice

□□□□□□ □□□, 2003 Coastal, Estuarial and Harbour Engineer's Reference Book Michael B Abbott, W. Alan Price, 1993-11-11 A major new reference book bringing together wide ranging expert guidance on coastal engineering including harbours and estuaries It covers both traditional engineering topics and the fast developing areas of mathematical modelling and computer simulation

A Mighty Capital under Threat Bill Luckin, Peter Thorsheim, 2020-03-03 Demographically nineteenth century London or what Victorians called the new Rome first equaled then superseded its ancient ancestor By the mid eighteenth century the British capital had already developed into a global city Sustained by its enormous empire between 1800 and the First World War London ballooned in population and land area Nothing so vast had previously existed anywhere A Mighty Capital under Threat investigates the environmental history of one of the world's global cities and the largest city in the United Kingdom Contributors cover the feeding of London waste management movement between the city's numerous districts and the making and shaping of the environmental sciences in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries
