Restructuring The Education System Agenda For The 1990s:

Restructuring the Education System Michael Cohen, 1988 The widening mismatch between the skills of the work force and the skill demands of the workplace underlie the need for school restructuring Within the categories of school level school district and state level issues a discussion about and suggestions for restructuring U S education in order to improve its productivity and student acquisition of higher order thinking skills comprise the crux of this document Educational goals the structure of knowledge instructional tasks and activities instructional group size and composition and instructional time are reviewed and analyzed as school level issues School district role central office functions the balance between centralized control and local autonomy present and alternative governance structures personnel policies and practices and collective bargaining are analyzed within the rubric of school district issues A discussion of state level issues suggests setting educational goals stimulating local innovation and rethinking state accountability systems In response to the educational challenges that schools face fundamental changes in the way local districts and states operate will determine the way schools are structured instruction is provided and staff roles and responsibilities are defined 24 references JAM Restructuring the Education System Michael Cohen, Education Policy and Telecommunications Technologies Arthur D. Sheekey, 1991 School Change Models and Processes Marshall Sashkin, John Egermeier, 1993 This report examines a 30 year history of educational change to identify differing perspectives strategies and useful principles The three most influential perspectives in educational change are the rational scientific perspective which proposes that change is created through the dissemination of innovative techniques the political perspective which generates change through legislation and other directives outside the school district and the cultural perspective which seeks improvement through value changes in organizations There are four strategies for implementing change fix the parts fix the people fix the schools and fix the system Systemic education reform offers new hope because it brings together the technical knowledge needed for improvement with a locally sensitive education strategy Through the Goals 2000 Initiative the U S Department of Education supports reform efforts within the framework of the six National Education Goals The Department and the Office of Educational Research and Improvement support standards based assessment techniques They also assist states in developing curriculum frameworks and help disseminate sound research and practice based knowledge A reference bibliography illustrative programs and additional sources are included JPT The Business Roundtable Participation Guide, 1992 Designed to acquaint CEOs and their senior corporate staffs with the challenges in education and the kinds of actions they need to take in cooperation with education political and community leaders Extensive list of resources Graphs Comprehensive Systems Design: A New Educational Technology Charles M. Reigeluth, Bela H. Banathy, J.R. Olson, 2012-12-06 Educational technology in the broadest sense is knowledge and competence for improving the educational process for using hardware equipment software methods and underware underlying organizational structures This volume in the Special Programme on Advanced Educational Technology presents the results of a NATO Advanced Research Workshop on educational systems design as a new educational technology. The objective of the workshop was to advance our knowledge about the comprehensive systems design approach for improving educational systems. The workshop was organized for the transdisciplinary interaction of three scientific groups representing design science, organizational systems science, and educational technology. Participants were selected based on their scholarship as members of one or more of these three groups. The book opens with the framing papers sent by the editors to participants prior to the workshop, then presents five sets of thematic contributions: the conceptual and empirical contexts of comprehensive systems design; the systems design focus; a systems view of designing educational systems; the educational context of systems design; and high technology focus in systems design.

Implementing School-based Management Harry P. Hatry, 1993. This report presents the findings and recommendations of an examination of the implementation of a major form of school-based management (SBM). It is based on case studies of the science and mathematics departments of 10 high schools and 9 middle or junior high schools in 12 school systems, almost all of which are urban school districts. The study found that implementation often falls short of the ideal. It did not find dramatic changes resulting from SBM. However, those schools and faculty members that took advantage of their added flexibility under SBM were able to achieve numerous small-scale improvements. The report provides a series of recommendations for school districts and individual schools to increase the likelihood of successful implementation of decentralization efforts such as SBM. The findings and recommendations cover such issues as: 1) the extent of decentralization of budgeting, expenditure, and personnel decisions; 2) the role of site councils and department heads; and 3) communication and training needs. Appendixes list participating schools and districts and contain a literature review. Contains 117 references. Author SLD. Resources in Education, 1994.

Progress of Public Education in the United States of America United States. Office of Education, 1984. Educational Administration in a Pluralistic Society Colleen A. Capper, 1993-07-01. In this bold, provocative supplemental text for the field of educational administration, Colleen Capper and contributors challenge administrators, policymakers, practitioners, and communities to confront the realities of schools and students in a pluralistic society. The book examines recent educational initiatives aimed at addressing the needs of students and staff from traditionally underrepresented groups marginalized on the basis of race, language, gender, sexual orientation, social class, or disability. Each chapter critically reviews the literature and research to probe the current characteristics of a nondominant group, including such information as its demographic characteristics, its role in school reform, its representation in organizational theory and behavior, its presence within curriculum and instruction, and its relationship with the school as a community. Capper argues for the adoption of a multiparadigmatic framework from which to approach educational leadership for today's schools. Progress of Education in the United States of America, 1984.
