Rethinking Governance Of The Army's Arsenal And Ammunition Plants:

Rethinking Governance of the Army's Arsenal and Ammunition Plants William Michael Hix, 2003 With its large industrial base of ammunition plants and arsenals the Army has more ordnance manufacturing capacity than it needs This study proposes a strategic vision for this capacity and explores four options for managing it privatization creation of a federal government corporation consolidation and recapitalization on multifunction posts It weighs the options from different perspectives including feasibility economic viability and risk posed to national interests ISBN 0 8330 3322 0 Price 30 00 Page count 350

Rethinking Governance of the Army's Arsenal and Ammunition Plants ,2003 The Department of the Army meets its materiel requirements principally through purchase from private sources However the Army produces certain ordnance related items and performs some ordnance related services in a set of arsenals ammunition plants other ammunition activities and depots The Army operates some of these facilities contractors operate others Although this set of facilities has been reduced since the end of the Cold War the remaining facilities still operate at less than their full capacity today The unused and underused capacity raises questions about how many of these facilities the Army needs how large they need to be and who should own and operate them This report represents the third phase of a multiyear study that examines the Army's ordnance industrial base and makes recommendations about these issues

Analysis of the Army's Arsenal Support Program Initiative Daniel Frisk, 2011 This is a print on demand edition of a hard to find publication The Arsenal Support Program Initiative ASPI helps maintain the functional capabilities of the Army's 3 mfg arsenals in Rock Island IL Watervliet NY and Pine Bluff AR A goal of the program is to enable commercial firms to lease vacant space at the arsenals thereby encouraging collaboration between the Army and commercial firms as well as reducing the costs to maintain the arsenal facilities Since the ASPI's inception a number of commercial tenants have leased unused property at the arsenals however the financial benefits for the gov't have been small relative to the program's funding This report conducted a business case analysis of the ASPI examining the program's costs return on investment and economic impact

Managing the Army's Arsenal and Ammunition Plants ,2003 The Army has a large industrial base that consists in part of 11 contractor operated and 3 government operated plants that make ammunition and 2 government operated arsenals that make ordnance items such as gun tubes for artillery pieces and tanks These facilities provide the Army more capacity than it needs or believes it will need so a portion of this industrial base is underused or mothballed Further much of the equipment in these plants is old obsolete and expensive to operate Finally manufacturing is a commercial function that is peripheral to the Army s inherently governmental functions and one uncommon to Western armed forces and even governments In fact the Army already spends most of its ammunition dollars in completely commercial plants The Army asked RAND Arroyo Center to assess options for managing these facilities Drawing on data current in fiscal year 2001 FY01 Arroyo Center researchers carried out that assessment and report their results in Rethinking Governance of the Army s Arsenals and Ammunition Plants
