Abstract

Dohmen et al. (2010) describe in their paper, which has been published in the American Economic Review, that risk aversion and impatience are negatively related to cognitive ability. This topic is important because controlling for cognitive ability might be necessary if someone is interested in the link of risk preferences or time preferences to real-world outcomes. We re-examine their key results by conducting an experimental study using two subject pools (agricultural students and farmers) and three levels of monetary incentives. Similar to Dohmen et al. (2010), our study finds the above-described negative correlations. However, the strength of the association is relatively small in the realm of risk aversion and negligible with impatience.

Rethinking Policy For At Risk Students:

Rethinking Policy for At-risk Students Kenneth K. Wong, Margaret C. Wang, 1994 At-Risk Students Robert Donmoyer, Raylene Kos, 1993-01-01 This book explores the circumstances of at risk students and argues that well intentioned policymakers and educators run the risk of making matters worse rather than better for these students even if their actions are based on the best social science evidence available The book demonstrates the diverse idiosyncratic nature of these students argues that traditional social science methods cannot capture this idiosyncrasy and diversity and presents research methods policies and programs that can accommodate student diversity A Nation at Risk Kenneth K. Wong, James W. Guthrie, Douglas N. Harris, 2014-06-03 This special issue examines the underlying assumptions of the A Nation At Risk report the context within which the Commission's work was situated and the effects of the report in improving teaching and learning as well as the performance of the public educational system The purpose is to address three broad questions Was America's education system really putting the nation at risk in the early 1980s What is the legacy of A Nation At Risk Given our current knowledge on education and human development the report's overall concern is restated What risks and opportunities lay before the nation today and how will they affect the notion of a learning society and our public education system Taken as a whole the seven articles address the three broad issues identified regarding the past current and future of educational reform in the United States Resources in Education, 2000 Community Planning to Foster Resilience in Children Caroline S. Clauss-Ehlers, Mark D. Weist, 2010-02-23 Children live in a world of ever increasing stress factors including global terrorism pervasive exposure to violence increasing substance use and economic and social instability To help them maneuver successfully through such a challenging world to adulthood community based resilience interventions are becoming more important than ever Currently resilience based interventions are expanding to examine not only the internal strengths children and adolescents bring to a variety of situations but also to explore how to leverage community and family resources in the context of a culturally diverse world Community Planning to Foster Resilience in Children reviews a variety of innovative approaches and actions that can be used at the community level to promote resilience in children and adolescents Key themes throughout the book focus on how to Shift the paradigm from illness to strengths and health Assess and improve environments to minimize harmful influences and increase protection Adapt to and build on strengths of cultural and linguistic variation in an increasingly diverse society Move toward collaborative approaches that involve youth families schools and community members who partner at all levels of program conception implementation evaluation and improvement For researchers clinicians and students Community Planning to Foster Resilience in Children will be an essential tool in their efforts to promote the health and success of youth Towards Coherence Between Classroom Assessment and Accountability National Society for the Study of Education, 2004-04-15 In analyses of the role of national educational assessment insufficient attention has been paid to the central place of the classroom Rather than encouraging a two way flow of information today s standards based frameworks tend to direct the flow of accountability from the outside into the classroom The authors of this volume emphasize that assessment as it exists in schools today consists mainly of the measurements that teachers themselves design evaluate and act upon every day Improving the usefulness of assessment in schools primarily requires assisting and harnessing this flood of assessment information both as a means of learning within the classroom and as the source of crucial information flowing out of classrooms This volume aims to encourage debate and reflection among educational researchers professionals and policymakers Five source chapters describe successful classroom assessment models developed in partnership with teachers while additional commentaries give a range of perspectives on the issues of classroom assessment standardized testing and accountability
