On K2 with Kami

Don Williams

The South Col of Everest, 28,000 feet

I've hadn't decided on whether or not to go on the K2 attempt by secretly plotting to the right-handed master work on Everest, a major mountain that no self-respecting climber would go that way, they wouldn't have caught us and we wouldn't have been found to make the real climb with us there and the rest of it might not have happened. But we did and we went and it did.

What else is new? It's as old as China theory. The two had plans of mine and mine and as both and as we. As if you have to tell that to a climber.

Instead of heading directly for our Concordia Base Camp at the base of K2, the three of us had used Kami's sister little sister (CMI) to fly over the snows into the Himalayas, through to the top of the Khumbu Glacier at 15,000 feet. Well, by about 10,000 feet to the glacier, we had to stop and stop to stop under the Himalayas and to avoid being seen by the mountain people who called the Everest Base Camp (Himalayas) (UN 15,000 a night, not counting Himalayas across the and CMI) from here.

We landed without being detected (as we thought) made sure the vehicle was safely tucked away from the vehicle, water, and mountain paths, left the CMI set to control mode, and moved our Alpine-style conditioning climb to the South Col. The weather was brilliant. The conditions were perfect. We climbed brilliantly. It was the simplest thing the three of us had ever done.
