is now widely accepted that America's poorest communities, communities of color and Native American communities suffer disproportionate harm from environmental hazards with higher exposure to pollution and higher incidence of lead poisoning, cancer, asthma and other diseases linked to environmental ills. And yet Harrison reports some regulatory staff view these problems as beyond their agencies' area of concern, requiring too many resources or see neutrality as demanding color-blind administration. Drawing on more than 160 interviews with interviewees including 89 current or former agency staff members and more than 50 environmental justice activists and others who interact with regulatory agencies and more than 50 hours of participant observation of agency meetings both open and closed door, Harrison offers a unique account of how bureaucrats resist, undermine and disparage environmental justice reform and how environmental justice reformers within the agencies fight back by trying to change regulatory practice and culture from the inside out. Harrison argues that equity, not just aggregated overall improvement, should be a metric for evaluating environmental regulation.

In a world of hustle culture and burnout, women don't want to lean in; they want to lie down. But they don't know exactly where to start. Kathleen Griffith has been in these exact shoes. When she set out to launch her own business, she found that the women's business space was big on go-girl messages but short on the gritty details of actually building a business. So she taught herself everything she could learn from the best minds in business and coached with personal growth experts. She realized shockingly that all the mindset work paid the highest dividends of all in her business and that through this process she had developed a proven method for success.
