Cox, 1929      Ecological Traits and Genetic Variation in Amazonian Populations of the Neotropical Millipede Poratia Obliterata (Kraus, 1960) (Diplopoda, Pyrgodesmidae) (Brazil) Natalie G. R. Bergholz, 2007 The periodic flood pulse of the Amazon River has been the main controlling factor in the local ecosystems for at least two million years. Numerous adaptations in some cases along with speciation have evolved in local terrestrial invertebrates. The small millipede Poratia oblitterata Kraus 1960 which probably originates from the Andes is currently known from a remarkably broad range of Central Amazonian biotopes i.e. various seasonal inundation forests, upland forest and plantations. Like most native millipedes P. oblitterata appears to escape flooding by tree ascents. Such developed survival strategies adaptive to annual inundation can either reflect ecological plasticity or implicate ecological speciation i.e. biotope specific races or ecotypes. To assess the causal mode of adaptation ecological studies with genetic analyses are combined in this work. Comparing the distribution, biotope range, population subdivision and genetic diversity of different millipedes the species P. oblitterata appears to feature a generalist strategy and widespread species which seems to cope well with various biotopes and thus successfully invaded seasonal inundation forests. The book is addressed to specialists in evolution, ecological genetics, ecology and conservation of wetlands, millipede research and conservation.

Trends in Acarology Maurice W. Sabelis, Jan Bruin, 2010-11-16. Mites and ticks are everywhere and acarologists go after them: some explore their bewildering diversity, others try to understand their how and why. For the past 50 years the International Congress of Acarology has been the forum for worldwide communication on the knowledge of Acari, helping researchers and students to look beyond their disciplines. Many mites and ticks are economic factors as they are pests of agricultural, veterinary and medical importance and several species have become model organisms in modern biology. The 96 contributions to Trends in Acarology reflecting fields as molecular biology, biochemistry, physiology, microbiology, pathology, ecology, evolutionary biology, systematic biology, soil biology, plant protection, pest control and epidemiology have been reviewed and carefully edited. This volume contains a wealth of new information that may stimulate research for many years to come.
