Burton,2016-03-26 In 1844 Sir Richard obtained an appointment on the Scinde Survey under Sir Charles Napier and from this moment his life was crowded with picturesque adventures Disguised as a half Arab half Iranian merchant and dervish Mirza Abdullah of Bushire he was sent out by his chief to collect information selling in the bazaars passing his evening in the mosques and estaminets and mixing freely with the natives till we can only echo Lady Burton's fervent wish that he should have woven some of the strange scenes he witnessed into a novel of personal adventure. He has however given us his fresh and witty Scinde or the Unhappy Valley. By this experience he prepared himself for the most romantic and marvelous achievement of his life the famous Pilgrimage to the Holy Places of Mecca and Medina into which it was then death for an Unbeliever to penetrate an expedition undertaken by Burton quite alone unaided disguised as a dervish and depending entirely on his knowledge of the language habits and religious customs of the fanatics with whom he travelled to prevent discovery and serious misadventure. This pilgrimage was incredibly daring and required almost superhuman courage coolness and presence of mind. The book describing this brilliant feat has just been republished by Lady Burton as part of the Memorial Edition of her husband's works on which she is now engaged and which she tells us will run to eighty volumes. It will be found as fascinating as when it first appeared and gives more insight into Mohammedan life and thought than the most elaborate treatise. Everything Sir Richard Burton has written is marked by originality and power and though in his writings as in his speech he was too impetuous and impatient he wielded a keen brilliant and epigrammatic pen. The degree of value which his works possess for utilitarian purposes has been much discussed but no one can dispute the dramatic vigor of his descriptions. The narrative of his adventurous expedition to Harar perhaps the most dangerous of his explorations as no white man had at that time ever penetrated to the Amir's court is given with much vivacity. The account of his interview with the potentate begins thus and is intensely exciting. I walked into a vast hall a hundred feet long between two long rows of Galla spearmen between whose lines I had to pass. They were large half naked savages standing like statues with fierce movable eyes each one holding with its butt end to the ground a huge spear with a head the size of a shovel. I purposely sauntered down them coolly with a swagger with my eyes fixed upon their dangerous looking faces. I had a six shooter concealed in my waist belt and determined at the first show of excitement to run up to the Amir and put it to his head if it were necessary to save my own life. Sent home on a sick certificate he volunteered for the Crimean War and became Chief of the Staff to General Beatson leader of the Bashi Bazouks. His account of persons and things in the latter stages of the great struggle is pungent and amusing. You are the most impudent man in the Bombay Army Sir he is told by Lord Stratford de Redcliffe and returns the compliment by describing the great Eltchi as a man who gained a prodigious reputation in Europe chiefly by living out of it. He next scented an opportunity for romantic adventure in the Unveiling of Isis the discovery of the sources of the Nile the mythical Lake Region of Central Africa and his discovery of Lake Tanganyika was of first rate importance and opened the way to all that followed. The Westminster Review Vol 140

Nineteenth-Century Travels, Explorations and Empires, Part I Vol 3 Peter J Kitson, William Baker, Indira Ghose, Susan Schoenbauer Thurin, 2021-12-16

A collection of writings on travels undertaken in the Victorian era. The texts collected in these volumes show how 19th century travel literature served the interests of empire by promoting British political and economic values that translated into manufacturing goods Postcolonialism, Psychoanalysis and Burton Ben Grant, 2008-11-10 Engaging closely with the work of Richard Francis Burton the iconic nineteenth century imperial spy explorer and translator this book sheds new light on the White Man's imperial fantasies and the ways in which metropolitan discourses drew upon and reinforced an intimate connection between fantasy and power in the space of Empire British Relations with Sind 1799 - 1843 Robert A. Huttenback, 2023-04-28 British Relations with Sind 1799 1843 An Anatomy of Imperialism explores the complex and evolving dynamics of British policy and intervention in Sind during a critical period of imperial expansion This meticulously researched volume examines the shifting priorities of the British East India Company from initial commercial interests to broader geopolitical strategies shaped by fears of invasion and global rivalries It uncovers the nuanced interactions between British officials and the ruling Talpur dynasty culminating in the annexation of Sind under Sir Charles Napier a pivotal event often mythologized in British imperial history This work situates the annexation within the broader context of 19th century British imperialism interrogating the paradox of territorial expansion despite official opposition to it Rich with historical detail it delves into the region's strategic significance tracing its history as a contested crossroads of invasion and culture By providing a compelling narrative and analysis of British motivations strategies and outcomes the book offers valuable insights into the anatomy of imperial expansion in South Asia and beyond Essential reading for scholars of British imperial history and South Asian studies this book sheds light on a critical episode in the shaping of the modern subcontinent This title is part of UC Press's Voices Revived program which commemorates University of California Press's mission to seek out and cultivate the brightest minds and give them voice reach and impact Drawing on a backlist dating to 1893 Voices Revived makes high quality peer reviewed scholarship accessible once again using print on demand technology This title was originally published in 1962
