

Examining results of the example project revealed that: (1) Every linear programming is simple and suitable tool for multi-objective problems and (2) the model can be extended to any number of objectives by incorporating only one additional constraint in the constraint set for each additional objective function. On the other hand, the model enables contractors to generate and evaluate all optimal tradeoff solutions between any two objectives, final cash balance and cost of money; final cash balance and initial cash balance; or cost of money and initial cash balance that suit their ordering of preferences and demands. Although the model considers a point set of variables and trade-off decision objectives, it is still a limited representation of the complex real world of the construction management environment. An example of the other factors is the delay of the client's progress payment more than one period. Also, more decision objectives may become additional concerns in the decision making for this full-of-uncertainty industry. Finally, the model presents an effective decision making tool to be used by industry practitioners with reasonable accuracy.
