

7 COMMON WORKPLACE SAFETY HAZARDS

1. Chemicals

When employees have to handle harmful or dangerous chemicals as part of their work, to stay safe, they must wear protective clothing, including specially treated gloves. It is also essential that any potentially harmful substances are labelled, and the correct signage is in place to warn of workplace hazards.

2. Confined spaces

The Confined Spaces Regulations 1997 are intended to protect workers from unsafe work practices. As an employer, you need to ensure a safe work system is in place should it be necessary for anyone to enter a confined space in the workplace.

3. Electrics

Electrical safety is an important issue in workplaces; especially where there is a risk that heavy-duty equipment might cause electric shocks. Warning signs must be in place, and information about how to treat victims of electric shock should be readily available.

4. Forklifts

Forklift trucks are capable of inflicting serious injury unless safety guidelines are followed. Most responsible employers use floor signs to ensure drivers and pedestrians are aware when forklifts are operating in a particular area, as well as floor tape and wall signs to demarcate areas where forklifts are not permitted.

5. Lockout or tagout

Using a lockout or tagout procedure ensures machinery is properly shut down after use and will not be operated again until it is safe to do so. It's important to pay attention to lockout systems and procedures, as countless accidents occur every year when these are not implemented.

6. Poor housekeeping

Good housekeeping practices keep workplaces free from hazards. Ensure spills are mopped up promptly to prevent slips and falls, visible dirt is cleaned away, and waste is carefully disposed of. It's important to warn employees and customers when floors have been recently cleaned and may still be wet.

7. Working at height

Specialist equipment has made a great difference to the safety of employees who have to work at height. You can now source platforms with handrails, bespoke safety helmets and kits for roofers, so there's no excuse for unsafe working practices.
