Process Of Child Development:

Cultural Processes in Child Development Ann S. Masten, 1999-02-01 The chapters of this volume were originally presented at the 29th Minnesota Symposium on Child Psychology The focus of this symposium on cultural processes in child development emerged from the growing recognition among those at the Institute of Child Development and many others in the field that more needs to be known about the processes linking individual development and the contexts in which it occurs and that this is no longer a luxury but essential for good science and good policy in an increasingly interconnected and pluralistic world The chapter authors in this volume chronicle the challenges as well as the benefits of venturing out to the growing edge of theory and research concerned with how cultures and individuals interact to shape development These investigators have wrestled with the complexities of figuring out the assumptions beliefs values and rules by which people conceptualize their lives and rear their children organize their societies and educate the next generation As a whole this volume reflects the beginnings of a cultural renaissance in developmental science

Play in Child Development and Psychotherapy Sandra Walker Russ, 2003-10-03 Child psychotherapy is in a state of transition On the one hand pretend play is a major tool of therapists who work with children On the other a mounting chorus of critics claims that play therapy lacks demonstrated treatment efficacy These complaints are not invalid Clinical research has only begun Extensive studies by developmental researchers have however strongly supported the importance of play for children Much knowledge is being accumulated about the ways in which play is involved in the development of cognitive affective and personality processes that are crucial for adaptive functioning However there has been a yawning gap between research findings and useful suggestions for practitioners Play in Child Development and Psychotherapy represents the first effort to bridge the gap and place play therapy on a firmer empirical foundation Sandra Russ applies sophisticated contemporary understanding of the role of play in child development to the work of mental health professionals who are trying to design intervention and prevention programs that can be empirically evaluated Never losing sight of the complex problems that face child therapists she integrates clinical and developmental research and theory into a comprehensive up to date review of current approaches to conceptualizing play and to doing both therapeutic play work with children and the assessment that necessarily precedes and accompanies it takes a different approach in examining childhood development where age does not directly determine where a child's development should be. In Always Stepping Forward: A Holistic Look at the Process of Child Development, Dr. Mac Donald, OTD, takes a look at the different stages of development in the order they progress without incorporating age ranges so that parents and caretakers can feel confident in caring for and understanding the specific needs of their child. From the beginnings of human life to the nuances of play, this book offers insightful and necessary information that gives parents and caretakers peace of mind over their child's growth. Divided into categories that follow a specific sequence that correlate with each other, readers will be able to navigate through the piece with ease in order to find the area of development they are most interested in. Readers will be able to value and celebrate each developmental phase and can anticipate which one will come next by knowing what to look for, why it happens, and how it will present itself. Dr. Jamie Mac Donald, OTD, is a pediatric occupational therapist who has experience in school, early intervention, and outpatient settings. Her passion for occupational therapy emerged at a young age when she came to America with her family from South Africa. She loves teaching parents, teachers, and children so they may become the best versions of themselves and help others do the same. In her free time, Dr. Mac Donald enjoys crafting and spending time with her dog at the beach.
