

The 3 Types of Procrastinators

According to Clinical Psychologist, Dr. Ellen Hendriksen

The Avoider

This type of procrastinator does so because a task makes them feel stressed, uncertain, or overwhelmed. They won't escape negative emotions though, as their avoidance leads to others like guilt, pressure, and anxiety.

The Optimist

This type of procrastinator "chronically underestimates their timeframe or overestimates their ability." They believe things they have to do won't take as long as they actually will or that they have more time than they do.

The Pleasure-Seeker

When you think of a procrastinator, this is probably the one that comes to mind. This type of procrastinator doesn't want to do what they have to do, so they don't do it until they feel like doing it, which may never happen.
