In a well-designed incentive plan, there may be some unexpected results that could throw off the budget if not explained, understood and agreed to ahead of time. For example, under a normal distribution at 100% performance, the high performers cost more than the underperformers save, which means the total cost of compensation at 100% of goal (red) will be 105% to 110% of the sum of the targets (blue).
