The Learning Challenge of the Knowledge Economy David Guile,2010-01-01 This book introduces a new perspective on the knowledge economy and the learning challenge it presents for individuals communities and societies It demonstrates that the debate about the role of knowledge in the economy has been framed in terms of Cartesian notions of objective and subjective knowledge and human capital notions that the aim of learning is to support people to adapt to a pre given economic reality The book argues that these framings rest on questionable assumptions about knowledge and learning and in the process deflect us from asking questions about our future economic political and social direction Taking ideas from Cultural Historical Activity Theory CHAT Social Theory and the Philosophy of Mind as its starting point the book rethinks the relation between knowledge learning and human activity It explores this rethinking through the form of learning Professional Vocational and Workplace most closely associated with the use of knowledge for economic political and social purposes

Social Work Ethics Chris Clark,1999-12-06 This book offers a critical introduction to professional ethics for social workers It recognises that social work is largely a state sponsored activity and therefore poses issues in political theory The traditional values and rules of practice ethics are explained using plentiful examples The critique is followed by an innovative concept of social work and its relationship to the state A new approach to practice ethics is developed based on four cardinal principles of respect justice citizenship and discipline

EBOOK: Assessment, Learning And Employability Peter Knight,Mantz Yorke,2003-10-16 What is assessed gets attention what is not assessed does not When higher education is expected to promote complex achievements in subject disciplines and in terms of employability problems arise how are such achievements to be assessed In the first part of the book it is argued that existing grading practices cannot cope with the expectations laid upon them while the potential of formative assessment for the support of learning is not fully realised The authors argue that improving the effectiveness of assessment depends on a well grounded appreciation of what assessment is and what may and may not be expected of it The second part covers summative judgements for high stakes purposes Using established measurement theory a view is developed of the conditions under which affordable useful valid and reliable summative judgements can be made One conclusion is that many complex achievements resist high stakes assessment which directs attention to low stakes essentially formative alternatives Assessment for learning and employability demands more than module level changes to assessment methods The final part discusses how institutions need to respond in policy terms to the challenges that have been posed The book concludes with a discussion of how institutions can respond in policy terms to the challenges that have been posed Assessment Learning and Employability has wide and practical relevance to teachers module and programme leaders higher education managers and quality enhancement specialists
