

Counseling Service

NATURE

Counseling is a specialized service that requires training in personality development and handling groups of individuals. It is a service offered to the individual who is undergoing a problem and needs professional help to overcome it; a problem that hinders the individual's development unless solved.

Meant to:

- help someone understand their problems and concerns from a psychological stand-point
- process thoughts and feelings from past experiences that impact the present
- understand how life context and external stressors impact current functioning
- connect with their personal strengths and intuition
- develop a plan for healing / change
- assist with developing more effective methods of coping and managing life on a daily basis
- help someone learn to use effective strategies to prevent return to unhealthy behaviours or ineffective coping strategies

A Collaborative Process

For counseling service to be effective, with the counselor as the helper, the client must assume some responsibility to participate fully, cooperatively, and willingly.

Theories serve as guidelines and provide framework to analysis.

Traditional Theories usually came from Western cultures. These theorists did not put into account multicultural perspectives in their work. A counselor who fails to consider that individuals have different backgrounds will handicap their client interaction.

Some theories and techniques

- Psychoanalytic Theory proposed by Sigmund Freud holds that human behavior is primarily the function of reactions to internal (thus mostly unconscious) stimuli: instincts, urges, thoughts
 - Individual Psychology is a psychological method or science founded by the Viennese psychologist Alfred Adler. The concept of this was formulated in the process in which Adler broke away from the psychoanalytic school of Sigmund Freud.
 - Person Centered Therapy is a form of talk-psychotherapy developed by psychologist Carl Rogers in the 1940s and 1950s. It is also known as person-centered psychotherapy, client-centered therapy and Rogerian psychotherapy
 - Behavioural Theory It's perspective psychopathology is defined as behavior that is disadvantageous or dangerous to the individual and/ or to other people. Certain environmental circumstances shape the development of maladaptive behavior.
 - Rational Emotive Behaviour Therapy is a type of cognitive-behavioral therapy developed by psychologist Albert Ellis. REBT is focused on helping clients change irrational beliefs.
 - Reality Therapy was proposed by William Glasser. The underlying problem of all clients is the same: they are either involved in a present unsatisfying relationship or lack what
- could even be called a relationship. Primary need is to be love, belong, and feel worthwhile "WDEP"
W= wants and needs
D= direction and doing
E= evaluation
P = planning and Commitment
- Transactional Analysis is an integrative approach to the theory of psychology and psychotherapy. Integrative because it has elements of psychoanalytic, humanist and cognitive approaches. It was developed by Canadian-born US psychiatrist Eric Berne during the late 1950s.
 - Gestalt Counseling is an existential/experiential form of psychotherapy that emphasizes personal responsibility, and that focuses upon the individual's experience in the present moment, the therapist-client relationship, the environmental and social contexts of a person's life, and the self-regulating adjustments people make as a result of their overall situation; developed by Fritz Perls, Laura Perls and Paul Goodman in the 1940s and 1950s
