

FINAL EXAM NOTES- CHAPTERS 9-12

CHAPTER 9: Pricing for Profits: Marginal Revenue and Marginal Cost

Marginal Revenue - equals price for price takers and is less than price for price makers

Smart businesses choose actions when marginal revenue is greater than marginal cost

Marginal Revenue

- Additional revenue from selling one more unit (or from more sales)

Marginal revenue depends on market structure (how competitive an industry is) and whether business is a price taker or price maker

- Marginal revenue = price for price-taking businesses in perfect competition
- Marginal revenue < price for price-making businesses in other market structures

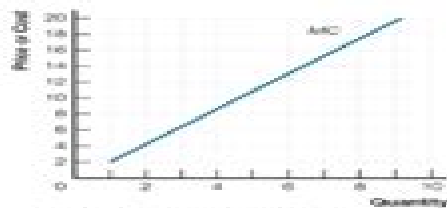

One price rule

- One-price rule: products easily resold have a single price in the market
- When a price-making business lowers price, must lower price on all units sold, not just new sales
- Reason why marginal revenue < price for price makers

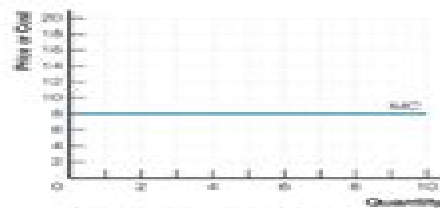

Marginal Cost

- As output increases, marginal cost increases for businesses operating near capacity or when businesses' additional input cost more, Marginal cost is usually constant for businesses not near capacity

Increasing and Constant Marginal Costs

a) Increasing Marginal Cost

b) Constant Marginal Cost
